"Rick Lazio is NOT Pro-Choice"

"Rick Lazio said he was pro-choice when he ran for Congress. I trusted him. I gave him my vote. Then I learned that Lazio voted 43 times against a woman's right to choose. Now he says he would support Supreme Court Judges who will overturn Roe v. Wade and legal abortion. I care about a lot of issues, but I want to make sure that women, not politicians, decide about abortion. I want my daughters to have the same rights I have. Rick Lazio can't be trusted to protect our right to choose."

END OF SEASON SALE

Bought your pillows & comforters elsewhere? Guaranteed you overpaid!!!

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their prices.

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

Thirty Sag Harbor Boatmen Motor To Orient, Pick A Card, Then... It's A Long Story

By Dan Rattiner

When the wealthy summer people raise money, they put up a tent, get it decorated with balloons and lights in the style of, say, the 1920s, hire a big band, a caterer and invite everybody over in tie and tails to enjoy the evening. There are celebrities, valet parking, various decorating and entertainment committees and often the tables are set with name tags so everyone knows where to sit. The event, which usually has a name, such as "Fly Me to the Moon," lasts usually three hours and results in somebody making a presentation and somebody else being honored.

> "In February we are going to do a pub crawl for charity here in Sag Harbor. Of course, we are going to call it the Culinary Stroll."

This Saturday, some local professional people in Sag Harbor held a fundraiser called a "Poker Run." It lasted fourteen hours. And in the end, it benefitted the Sag Harbor Fire Department several thousand dollars. It bore no relation whatsoever to a summer fundraiser.

The event began promptly at 11 a.m. Saturday morning, when about 100 people assembled in a pack of thirty-two boats just offshore from Long Wharf for what looked like the start of an all day boating outing. Among those attending and captaining boats were Captain Dave Peterson, Captain John McLean, Captain Bryan Boyhan, Captain Dave Reiner, Captain Richie Flood and Captain Charlie Canavan.

I spoke, when it was all over, with Captain Canavan, who in real life actually IS a captain, a pilot for American Airlines, who flies 767s.

"Dave Reiner, in real life, is a real estate man," Canavan said. "Bryan Boyhan works at the Sag Harbor Express newspaper. Richie Flood is a home builder. Dave Peterson is an airline mechanic at East Hampton Airport. John McLean has an international manufacturing business."

"What kind of manufacturing?" I asked.

"He can take a humidor and turn it into a pet cemetery before you know it," Captain Canavan said with an absolutely straight face. "John McLean is also one of the founders of our charitable organization, known as the Sag Harbor Hysterical Society. It's about three years old and has done all sorts of fundraising events. We've raised money for the PBA, the food pantries, for Schiavoni's Market for the old folks who need help. And we don't just go out in boats. We've had backyard barbecues. We've had other events. It's a good way to get all the neighborhood together besides everything else."

There were, nevertheless, some very special boats assembling there off Long Wharf. Dave Peterson and his family were aboard a beautiful old Chris Craft. Dave Reiner and friends were aboard a twenty-eight foot formula boat. Richie Flood brought FLASH FLOOD. Captain Canavan was out there in his thirty foot Sea Ray.

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

The four-year-old marriage of Southampton's Bill Koch and Angela Browder-Koch is winding down into divorce. A pre-nuptial agreement signed two days before the wedding on November 24, 1996 stipulates that Angela, in the event of divorce, gets one percent of Koch's assets multiplied by the number of years they were married. Since Forbes Magazine estimates his net worth around $650 million, that's a lot of money. It's a shame this marriage is ending; everyone was rooting for them. They have two children, William, three, and Robin, two. We wish them the best.

There's a rumor, unconfirmed, that Saks Fifth Avenue is buying Dreesen's Market on Newtown Lane for $4 to 5 million. Rudy deSanti told columnist Neal Travis of The New York Post that if there is a sale, "When the time comes you'll know about it."

At the National Breast Cancer Coalition's Benefit last Tuesday in Manhattan, Chevy Chase of East Hampton, who served as auctioneer, got everybody's attention by stripping down to his black Jockey shorts. "What's it going to take for you all to lose your money tonight?" he asked. "How about I lose my pants?" The event raised over one million dollars.

Among those attending Roger Rosenblatt's book signing at the Knickerbocker Club last Tuesday were Hamptonites Lynn Sher, Tom Brokaw, John and Jackie Leo, Avery and Judy Corman and Alice and Michael Arlen. Rosenblatt's pal Garry Trudeau was there. Also Arthur Schlessinger Jr. and Calvin Trillin.

Poker

I was talking to Captain Canavan out front of the Harbor View Restaurant, which occupies one half of the Veterans of Foreign Wars building on Bay Street overlooking the Harbor. It was six p.m. and the sun was about to set. Just across the street from the Restaurant, members of the Sag Harbor Hysterical Society were pulling in, tieing up and bringing over to the restaurant big boxes of stuff from off the boats. The grand finale to the Poker Run was about to begin.

"How do I unlock the hatch to get out the cooler?" someone was shouting to Canavan from across the street.

"It isn't locked," Canavan yelled back. "There is no lock on it. Are you sure you're on the right boat?"

"I put it in there. I know the boat."

"I don't own a lock. You have to slide it open. Side to side."

"I've been pushing and pulling it."

"There you are."

Inside, the band, the Acoustic Matinees from Islip was already setting up. Over the bar, the TV was on Channel 4. The first game of the Subway Series would begin in just under two hours.

Here is how the fundraiser, which has been in the planning stages for more than a month, worked. Everybody attending had to pay $30. At 11 a.m., they'd all leave the Sag Harbor Inlet as a great noisy pack of boats and go to the North Fork, to Orient by the Sea, a waterfront restaurant. They'd tie up at the dock, go into the restaurant and enjoy a buffet of food and some drinks. Then they would go back to their boats and be off to Sterling Harbor, to Bistro Blue, another North Fork waterfront restaurant for the same thing. Oh. I forgot to mention that at Orient by the Sea, everybody would pick one card from one of four fresh decks of playing cards. At Bistro Blue they would pick another card. They'd do this at three other restaurants, the last one being the Dockside in Sag Harbor, and as a result everybody would have five cards and the person with the best hand would win $200. The other two restaurants were the Old Barge in Southold and the Dory on Shelter Island.

Here in Sag Harbor, with the event winding down toward, well, the conclusion of World Series Game Number One on the TV during the wee hours, Canavan told me things had not turned out quite as they had expected.

"At the Old Barge in Southold, I called the Dory Restaurant to tell them we were an hour away. Then, as we were crossing the bay, I called them on the marine radio to tell them we were arriving in ten minutes and please be ready. About one hundred customers. They said we hadn't given them enough notice. There'd be no food, no drinks, the bartender had gone home, another bartender was sick, don't come here.

"I had arranged with them a month ahead we were coming. I reconfirmed a week ahead. Had we been able to go, we'd have been there an hour between 3 and 4 in the afternoon. Not a busy time. With everybody dropping maybe $20 at the bar, they'd probably have taken in $2,000 for the hour. And they'd have had 100 new customers sampling the food at their restaurant."

"What did you do?" I asked.

"There's no such thing as four card poker. We radioed the Chequit. Drew the cards at the Chequit. Great time at the Chequit. Wonderful old turn of the century Shelter Island Hotel."

Canavan told me that when the event was set up a month ago, each restaurant was given the option of either putting out the buffet for free since they were doing a fundraiser, or charging them for the buffet. All the restaurants did it for free.

"Orient by the Sea has great food," Canavan said, "or at least that's my opinion. What a spread they put out."

As for the Dory, Canavan speculated that they might have been caught up in a change of ownership. He'd heard it had been sold. So what might have been true a month ago might not have been true today.

I asked Canavan if there were any more Sag Harbor Hysterical Society events coming up. He said there were.

"In February, we're going to do a pub crawl for charity here in Sag Harbor," he said. "Of course, we're going to call it the Culinary Stroll."

We went inside. On the screen over the bar here at the Harborside, The World Series lasted just under five hours, ending at 1 a.m. The Yanks won.

I have no idea who had the best poker hand.

Hats off to the Sag Harbor Hysterical Society, a force for good in the world. ●

The Fly

Do Flies Take Trips? Of Course They Do. Here's What They Do When They Get There.

By Dan Rattiner

I drove to New York yesterday morning. Had some business meetings to attend to. Wound up staying overnight. About seven this morning, I went out to my car, which I had parked on East 77th Street in front of a deli, noted happily it was still there, and got in to begin the two hour drive back home to East Hampton. As I did, a single black fly flew in behind me. It landed on the dashboard.

I spent about five minutes trying to get that black fly out of the car. I shooed him off the dashboard and got him headed over toward the driver's window, which I had opened, but at the last minute he flew in the back. I rolled up a newspaper to take a swat at him, urging him out the passenger's window so as to avoid such a calamity, but he would not go out there, either.

I never did get a shot at him. He either got the message and flew out when I wasn't looking, or he was somewhere in the back. Wherever he was, I figured it was not all that important. I had to get home. I couldn't wait any longer.

I noticed for the first time that there was somebody smaller with him... another black fly. He must have picked her up around the buckets of fish.

It was on the Expressway just passing Exit 64 that he turned up again. He flew over and landed upside down on the inside of the windshield. He stayed there awhile. Then he flew around my head and landed on the passenger's window. I lowered it. He flew in the back just as he was about to get sucked down inside the passenger door.

I don't know about you, but I have often wondered what goes through the mind of a fly when it is transported in a car for a long distance. One morning, he is with his loved ones living happily under the awning just above the fruit display at the deli. By the afternoon he is following somebody out of a car in Old Sturbridge, Connecticut. Wow! What happened to Uncle Harry, Aunt Freida and all the kids. Where did they go?

Once I drove nearly two hundred miles with a dragonfly fighting desperately the whole way to keep from being blown off a windshield wiper. He succeeded. And he arrived in Wilmington, Delaware exhausted, but clean as a whistle ready to start a whole new life.

Another time, I parked at East Hampton Town beach and was inundated by a whole mess of big sassy black flies who were messing around a Town trash can there. I opened all the windows and headed away from the beach, and one at a time the flies, believing they were just circling around inside the car, glided out the car window to find themselves, to their astonishment, somewhere else. The last one left when I was right about Town Pond. I figured they were all within hailing distance of one another, so, in this emergency situation, the one at the Pond could be called over to the one that flew onto the porch of the Hedges Inn, and then the two of them could be called over by a third one a block down Ocean Road and so forth and so on. They'd find their way back to that Town Trash Can.

And so I made my first stop, just as soon as I got to East Hampton, the Town Trash Can at the East Hampton Town Beach. The trash can had been emptied. And so there were no flies around. But I opened the window anyway, and I urged the black fly in my car out. See? Smell the ocean. Listen to the waves. He flew in the back.

The black fly DID fly out of my car when I got to Three Mile Harbor Road and started the two mile drive up toward my house. But by this time, I was just so curious, I decided to turn the tables. I'd follow him. Where would he go?

Where he went was back to the beach. Not East Hampton Main Beach, but what is known as Wyborg's Beach adjacent to the exclusive Maidstone Club here. He stayed there for about twenty minutes, soaking up the rays, I guess, then headed back into town where he disappeared into the three story wooden windmill on the town green. He was seeing the sights. I followed him to Nick & Toni's around lunch time, then up to Sag Harbor where for awhile he buzzed around the people fishing off Long Wharf. Then, as he was heading west on the Montauk Highway back toward the Expressway, I noticed for the first time that there was somebody with him. It was another black fly. Slightly smaller. He must have picked her up around the buckets of fish at Long Wharf.

I had a very difficult time keeping up with these two on the Long Island Expressway heading back to the City. They were very fast. But I did, and I was able to keep them in my sights until they made the turn off at Lefrak City onto Queens Boulevard heading toward the 59th Street Bridge. Then I lost them.

I knew exactly where they were going, though. They were headed to the green and white striped awning over the fruit stand at the deli on East 77th Street.

Now I drove down the Expressway past the Queens Boulevard turnoff and shortly found myself in just about the worst traffic jam I have ever been in heading into Manhattan. Then I remembered. There had been an announcement by the Flying Traffic Reporter on the radio to avoid the Expressway westbound. I'd forgot. But the flies hadn't.

It was close to midnight when I finally arrived again out on Three Mile Harbor Road in East Hampton. I've been thinking about those plane trips where you fly in from Cairo aboard EgyptAir and as they circle Kennedy the stewardesses come down the aisle with bug spray so the flies from the Nile don't get out of the planes in America. This is a really bad thing, it seems to me. Something ought to be done to put a stop to the practice. ●

Dan Endorses...

Either George Bush, Al Gore, Rick Lazio, Hillary Clinton, Reggie Seltzer Or Felix Grucci

By Dan Rattiner

Well, this is the issue where the newspaper is supposed to endorse one candidate over another candidate and tell you why they did that.

I'm the editor of this newspaper, and in the past, with the issues clear, I have endorsed one candidate or another. This year, however, I haven't got a clue. I've been reading the policy speeches, or tried reading the policy speeches. I've watched the debates, or tried watching the debates. Each candidate – for Senate, for President, for Congress – seems to be allowed to say whatever outrageous thing they want to say about their opponent and there is no possible way to separate truth from fiction. Mr. Bush's proposals will bankrupt the country in four years, but Gore's will lead us to four more years of prosperity. Mr. Gore's proposals will use up the entire proposed tax surplus inside of twenty four hours, but Bush's proposals will immediately help the poor, the elderly and the sick. Hillary has voted against all the elderly people. Lazio votes for them. Lazio is in favor of no prescription drugs for children under the age of four. Hillary wants to give children under the age of four drugs for free. How can they allow this?

I start listening to all this crap, and very shortly I give up listening to it. I go on to something else. And I am not the only one. Just about everybody I talk to about this says the same thing. The candidates are spending more money than ever and they say absolutely nothing logical. It is so boring and so expensive and such a waste. And it is a national phenomenon. Almost nobody watched the Presidential Debates. Why would they?

The only glimmer of help I can give you in all of this is something George Bush says (over and over) which is that there is this huge budget surplus and that he, George W. Bush will give it to you to decide how you want to spend it, while his opponent wants to give it to Washington Bureaucrats to let them decide how to spend it, which means exactly the opposite of what it seems.

What he is saying is that he will cut everybody's taxes equally. So rich people will have a barrel of money left over to fool around with they never had before. While the poor people will have about twenty cents left over to fool around with they never

THEY SHOULD HAVE INVOKED THE MERCY RULE

By Dan Rattiner

If you've ever been to a high school baseball game, you may have seen the umpires invoke something they call The Mercy Rule. The score is 23 to 0, the team with the twenty-three is still up with the bases loaded and nobody out in the top of the first inning and out run the umpires invoking this rule. The game is over. There shall be no further embarrassment. The team with the twenty-three has won.

Watching the World Series, I have come to the conclusion that nobody is ever going to beat the Yankees. They've got Roger Clemens who throws the ball 100 miles an hour, and sometimes right at the batter. They've got El Duque, an immovable force from Cuba who can outthink everybody, and in the bullpen they have Mariana Rivera who can coolly throw one strike after another whenever the other team even thinks about making a little trouble.

I do not watch baseball on any regular basis. I'm told that the reason the Yankees have ballplayers who are several levels above everybody else is that they are a richer team than anybody else. Their policy is to simply watch all the players playing and when one stands head and shoulders above the others, buy him. They've been doing this for the past twenty years, ever since George Steinbrenner bought the club. And if during the first fifteen the managers couldn't figure out what to do with all these terrific players, Steinbrenner had an answer for the managers. He fired them. Then he hired Joe Torre as manager, Torre got it right, and Mr. Steinbrenner, from whom all riches flowed, said keep the fellow. And so here we are today.

My opinion is that the Mets could only have beaten the Yankees if somehow they handicapped the Yankees. Only allow Derek Jeter to play five innings a game. Make Bernie Williams wear arm splints when he comes to bat after the sixth inning.

The Mets did show that they are a very fine team, even in losing four out of five. They have Mike Piazza. They have Benny Agbayani. And up in the stands, you could almost hear the Yankee agents counting out the money it is going to take to make them Yankees next year.

All in all, though, the Mets just couldn't seem to hit any balls being thrown by the Yankee pitchers. A Met would come up, watch the first one come down the middle for a strike, swing and miss the second one, awkwardly and successfully prevent himself from swinging at the third one which would be a ball, and then waggle the bat ineffectively at the fourth one for strike three.

I almost wished, watching this sorry business, that the umpire would say, after the first called strike, "that's it, you're out. Next batter." Or better yet, just invoke the old Mercy Rule. •

Dan

had before. His opponent won't do that.

This utterance, which simply restates the differences between the Republicans and the Democrats, also seems to explain why we are having such a sad, broken down bunch of campaigns. When the Democrats were in power years ago, they put in so many programs to help the poor that it damn near ruined the country. Then the Republicans came in, shut down many of these programs, allowed the rich to get richer and make more jobs, and the country prospered, with many of the poor climbing out of poverty.

Now we have gotten so rich there is all this money left over. Shall we go back to setting up programs for the poor? Shall we take the risk? Everybody wants to help the poor. And surely they need help. But hey, what shouldn't have worked, worked. We cut the programs. Everybody prospered. What's a politician to do?

And so, in the middle of this muddle, I have this to say. George Bush seems to have a good instinctive grasp on how to run the country. But he doesn't seem to know much about the details. Al Gore has all the details, but I'm not sure he has the instincts to use those decision-making details wisely.

Hillary Clinton is attractive and fun, but seems the sort of person who says my way or the highway. Also, she has no experience. Rick Lazio has lots of experience, some of it demonstrating good thinking, but he looks like somebody who still thinks of himself as a kid. And I wonder if that means he doesn't have the nerve to stand up to the grownups (read corrupt politicians).

As for our Congressional seat, we have Reggie Seltzer, a gutsy seventy-one year old grandmother and librarian with no political experience, versus Felix Grucci, a beefy Town Supervisor who has had corruption in his administration, but otherwise has done a good job.

Good luck. As for me, when I get into the voting booth, I shall undoubtedly make a decision I regret the moment I get back out. •

Our Haunted House And Those Who Died Under Suspicious Circumstances There

By Pamela Gibson

Three days after we moved into our new house, my son arrived home from school with the news that I had just bought the neighborhood Haunted House. This announcement did give me a moment's pause: I thought the realtor should have mentioned this, but we hadn't noticed anything flying through the living room, and my son was "OK" with this knowledge, in fact, we agreed that "it was kind of interesting." I knew that the house had been vacant and unkempt, a "fixer-upper" as they say. But the price was right, and after all, I really bought a long neglected garden that just happened to have a house in the middle. The renovation of the house was intriguing but the restoration of the garden was the real project. Then, three weeks later, a local electrician casually mentioned that a previous owner of my house had died mysteriously. He told me that thirty years earlier he and his sister were walking along the beach, nearby, when they noticed something floating out in the inlet. Being curious eight and nine year olds, they hopped into their canoe and approached what they thought was a dead deer. "Imagine our shock when we realized that it was the missing School Principal. We recognized the color of his hair and his distinctive Indian blanket jacket. We had seen it many times." He had my attention.

> After all, Mrs. Ferguson did have an unfortunate interest in collecting seventeenth century European children's tombstones.

The electrician continued: The local School Principal had been missing for a few days and neighbors had speculated about where he had gone, but no one apparently thought he was dead and no one knew how he ended up floating in the inlet. Perhaps he had a heart attack and fell off a dock? It was a mystery. And mysteries are the source of ghostly speculation.

So when I heard that Dr. Jason Wirth, a Doctor of Philosophy, was lecturing at Southampton College on the subject of "The Phenomenology of Ghosts Across World Traditions" I was interested. Dr. Wirth opened with the announcement that it is "irrelevant whether there are ghosts or not," (speak for yourself, I thought) that he was not there to prove or disprove the existence of ghosts, but to talk about his study of the human experience of ghosts in Visual Arts around the world. He discussed the last moment of life, moment of death and moments after death as depicted in Francis Bacon's famous triptych depicting his lover's suicide. There were

Ghostly

Screaming Pope paintings and eleventh century Japanese scrolls of Buddha's descending: a Goya painting of monsters, owls, bats, and spirits rising from a sleeping person, with the inscription "The sleep of reason produces monsters." This was more a lecture about madness than hauntings. Besides, I was hoping that ghosts could be friendly, not monsters.

I want to know what makes a house haunted, or what makes us think a house might be haunted. As a teenager, I knew of several Haunted Houses. There was Ferguson's Castle on a hill overlooking Huntington Harbor: a Spanish style deserted mansion, the scariest place in town. Rumor had it that the floors were paved in the gravestones of children and that when Mrs. Ferguson was alive she would dine with her dead son, who had died in WWI. He always sat at the head of the table.

I can tell you that there are numerous accounts of ghostly sightings on Long Island. According to The Mansions of Long Island's Gold Coast by Monica Randall, The Winfield Estate, in Glen Cove, has a grief stricken young woman that cries. Thirty people claim to have heard her. This apparition, her name is Edna, is also seen walking through the gardens wearing a faded blue dress. A suicide, it is said that at the moment of Edna's death a bolt of lightning struck the main fireplace in the mansion, cracking Edna's image depicted in the carved marble of the mantle; a moment more than disturbing to the many party guests that claim to have witnessed the moment. The Whitney Estate, in Old Westbury, hosts the ghost of a disappointed artist who jumped off the twelve-story water tower. And everyone remembers the Woodward Estate story of Mrs. Woodward mistaking her husband for a prowler and letting him have both barrels of her shotgun. At the Woodward Estate, the pipe organ played all by itself, doors opened and closed and heavy breathing was heard on the lower level.

But back to Dr. Wirth: it is his theory that Western Culture does not mourn well. Our lack of adequate rituals to celebrate death and pay homage to our ancestors feeds myths and the belief in ghosts. It is a remaining guilt or unclear circumstance of death that gives rise to ghosts.

I believe that you can also add the "grain of truth" that is always present. After all, Mrs. Ferguson did have an unfortunate interest in collecting seventeenth century European children's tombstones. She did use them to pave her floors. And according to The Mansions of Long Island's Gold Coast Mrs. Ferguson did have a wax model of her dead son seated at the head of her dining table for dinner. An artist did jump from that water tower, poor Edna was found dead in her room and Mr. Woodward was certainly shot by his wife.

At the risk of disturbing the serenity in my house, and knocking on wood, for good measure, I am happy to report that, to date, we have not seen the Ghost of the School Principal. But there is always next Halloween. ●

Good Grief

A Bereavement Camp In Westhampton To Help Children Deal With Loss Of A Loved One

By Janet Berg

Hidden deep inside someone who has lost a loved one are mixed emotions of abandonment, fear, pain, anger, and grief – unimaginable feelings for a child to endure.

Hidden in the Pine Barrens of Westhampton Beach is a sanctuary of hope, comfort, relief, salvation and recovery. This is Hospice. It is a special place full of guardian angels that sit on your shoulders disguised as social workers, therapists, nurse practitioners and trained volunteers. Working in unison with the dying and their families, they offer spiritual support and dignity.

> Kids have a very limited ability to tolerate painful feelings and they have a very healthy mechanism to shut it off when it is too much for them.

Hospice, with its headquarters in Westhampton, also works in conjunction with the schools; when a group of children who have lost someone needs help they are called into the schools year round for group therapy. It could be the loss of a friend, a sibling, a parent, a grandparent, or an uncle. Last year, they did group therapy at Riverhead Middle School and Southampton Middle School, and have done groups at Hampton Bays and East Hampton Schools.

The feedback on the eight week long program has been good. It is usually held last period and, during the last week, they meet with parents. It's convenient because the kids are already in a familiar place and the parents don't have to worry about transportation.

Parents have asked for help in getting the message across to the schools because the kid's behavior problems in pre-teenage kids are often related back to the grief. And this can happen a couple of years after the death, when adults think they have gotten over it.

"Unfortunately, it's just starting," said Executive Director Priscilla Ruffin. "We are doing research on this in the field, and time after time, we see a kid that was an honor student start to slip and get into trouble. It doesn't go away."

Hospice provides services for a year after the death and they are trying to weave in long-term liaisons with the parents; they saw a need to offer more for the children of these families. So they came up with, "Camp Good Grief," a summer day camp held at Quinipet, Shelter Island.

Some children who attend this week-long bereavement camp have lost someone to a long terminal illness, while others have lost someone to a violent death or tragic accident.

As the people of Hospice became identified in the community as "the people who know how to deal with death and dying," it seemed like a natural extension to offer "Camp Good Grief" for the kids. Although many of the stories are heartbreaking, it is not a place to be brokenhearted.

"In fact, it is a place to have fun," says social worker supervisor and bereavement coordinator Sarah Zimmerman. "They can run and play ball or make beaded bracelets or do whatever they choose. It is a mix of therapy with fun. At home or school, the children may feel different than other kids, but at camp they all feel the same. It is an effective way for children who suffer a similar loss to relate to one another, then share a creative, therapeutic activity.

The program, started four years ago with twenty-six participants; this past summer, the number grew to seventy-five participants. "We knew, intuitively, that we were on to a good thing," said the Hospice director, who has been doing this work for twenty years. "We are proud of our accomplishments but wish to disperse it to the world, because it can be replicated in other places."

There is no charge for the kids who attend this camp as it is underwritten by proceeds from the East End Hospice Thrift Shop and by grants and generous donations from the East End community. "And The East Hampton Rotary actually provided all the food, prepared it, served it and cleaned up every day," Ms. Zimmerman added.

When asked how they find the strength to handle such an emotional job, the two hospice workers said that offering a calming presence is very rewarding. The most difficult time is the first day when they have the go-around in the group and people are introducing themselves and talking about who they've lost and how it happened.

The children may be in the middle of playing and then they start talking about funerals and then continue playing. Sometimes the children don't know how to identify their feelings. Kids have a very limited ability to tolerate painful feelings and they have a very healthy mechanism to shut it off when it is too much for them. So they grieve in little bits at a time, something adults cannot do.

The director recalled, "Once a parent said to me (words that immersed me forever in this kind of work), 'You people give the children the "vocabulary" they need.'"

Everyone handles the healing differently. The girls may love to talk, but the boys have a lot of anger to break through. "We had a lot of ten-year-old boys this year," Ms. Ruffin informed me, "very kinetic ten-year-old boys. At camp, unlike school or home, they are allowed to act out their emotions and scream or curse. About one-third of the campers return the following year, and this year the kinetic boys that came back were "just the most charming role models you'd want to see in your entire life. You'd ask yourself, Are you the same kid as last year?

"It is the older teens that we want to attract, but they don't come because it is not cool enough for them. They rely on their peers, but the peers don't have a lot of resources about this, especially since they haven't had a loss in their lives," Ms. Ruffin added.

The therapy for the children may be done privately, one-on-one, or in a group. There are exercises that let the children open up. There is no right way; it is very individual. What works for one child may not work for another. Professional Art therapist Rebecca DiSunno, who has a private practice in East Hampton specializing in children's art therapy is on staff and also teaches at NYU.

Aside from art therapy or writing in a journal, there are many activities, including camp songs, making ice cream sundaes, sports, mime and movement, Olympics and shell-seeking on the beach. It is obvious they get through to the kids and the kids get through to them, as there is a lot of caring involved and you see the bigger kids hugging the little ones.

"One exercise we do," said a social worker, "is called the web. We roll some yarn and ask some questions and then we all end up 'connected.'" Sarah said her group "always does it around their fingers," and Priscilla laughs and says, "My group does it around their heads." Then Sarah interjects in a playful voice, "Well, we crawl under our web."

In the shell game, the instructions say to look at the person next to them and write them a message of something "healing" for them to carry away with them. Priscilla sighed, "For the last two years my group has not been able to do that because there's been a lot of emotions and anger and feelings bottled up inside the group. So, what we've done with them is write a message to the person that died and they throw it as far as they can into the water."

As all children love surprises, the workers have a surprise a day at camp. It could be a DJ or a magician. One person they've tried to get (without success) is television star Rosie O'Donnell, not only because kids love her, but because she also lost her mother when she was a child, and they can relate to her. So now that a very special little girl from Commack, Long Island has grown up into their mentor and role model, the kids of Long Island are asking in their loudest kid voices, 'ROSIE, PLEASE COME VISIT US, WE NEED A HUG!"

The volunteers are also a very special group of committed men and women of all ages, who have been through an extensive screening and training program and then given an eight week long training session in issues of grief and loss. It's important to have more men because, very often, the person the child has lost is a man and a male role model is comforting for them.

"This year was the first year we had 'Youth Volunteers,'" the director was pleased to say. "We did the pilot study in Riverhead High School, training sixteen year olds, and are ready to do it in other schools."

When the therapists gave a thank you dinner for the volunteers, some of the teenagers said, "You don't know what you did for me because now I know what direction I want to go in my life."

Nigel Noble

Documentary Filmmaker

By Joan Zandell

The last time I saw Nigel Noble, he'd just returned from filming the opening scene of his most recent documentary, The Charcoal People, in Brazil. The memory of that meeting remained etched in my mind; Nigel said he was making a film about the destruction of the rain forest and its connection to child labor in Brazil. He then vividly went on to describe the scene he had just filmed, in which hundred-year-old trees were felled by using enormous chains attached to the back of tractors scouring the landscape, ripping up everything in their path, to be burned for charcoal for the pig iron industry of Brazil, seventy percent of which is exported to the United States. Nigel said that the sound of the trees being ripped from the ground was like "the screaming of the earth." When I remind him of that meeting, we are sitting in the cozy, serene living room of his home in Springs and when I ask if he still feels the same way, he responds, "Yes. It was a mind numbing moment."

He stops, as if to think about it again, then he continues, " I'm realistic. I know that films don't really have that much of an impact on people's lives. After making this film, however, I will never look at the world the same way again." And after seeing one of Nigel Noble's films, neither will you.

Nigel Noble is an Academy Award Winning Documentary Director whose films make you laugh and cry simultaneously, leave you with a feeling of not only having gotten to know sympathize and care about the people in his films but also to anguish over their plight. Whether he is telling the story of an intergenerational chorus as he did in Close Harmony for which he won the Oscar, or A Stitch In Time, for which he received an Oscar nomination, two EMMY Awards, two ACE'S and five CINE Golden Eagles, or Voices Of Sarafina, a documentary about the actors of this musical about African school children during Apartheid, it is clear that Nigel Noble loves people. Noble continues, "Perhaps I'm underestimating the power of the media, but I just record what is."

How does one begin to work on a project like The Charcoal People? "I was working in McKinley State Park in Alaska in twenty degrees below zero when I received a phone call asking me if I were interested in doing a series of documentaries in Brazil. Are you kidding? All I could see in my mind's eye were the beaches of Rio and I was on the next flight. Originally we were going to do a feature film. But then on the last day of my trip, the producer pulled out a book with all these photographs called Os Carvoeiros - The Charcoal People Of Brazil by Marcos Prado and from that came this documentary. I had no idea what I was getting myself into. And quite frankly, I like it that way."

Nigel Noble likes to put himself in another person's shoes. "Art can do that," he says. "What I make films about is what we don't notice."

Noble is concerned about the future of the planet and the state of human relations. "In America the priority is work and making money. In Brazil, it seemed to me that the priority was friendship. There was a real sense of caring for one another. They would be there physically to help one another out. There was no sense of antagonism. Parents would watch out for one another's children. Brazilians are an extremely outgoing and friendly people – they are focused on joy rather than work."

In THE CHARCOAL PEOPLE, we see another side of Brazilian life however. There are thousands of migrant workers who cut down forests daily in the Brazilian Savannas and Amazon Rain Forest in order to make charcoal for the pig iron and steel that is produced to make the cars we drive and the houses we live in. We meet three generations of migrant workers. We hear the story of a 76-year-old man who has spent his life working the charcoal ovens of Brazil. Then we meet a nine-year-old child working in the charcoal industry of Brazil, breathing in the smoky air and stoking the ovens rather than going to school and aspiring to something greater because his family desperately needs the income to survive. As a result, the children remain illiterate and incapable of doing anything else. Notwithstanding their illiteracy, the charcoal people understand the tragedy that they must destroy nature in order to survive.

Despite the poverty, despite the hard life that they lead, most of the children want to grow up to be just like their fathers – which means that they will be trapped in the charcoal camps generation after generation. Freedom for these workers is hard bought. The job pays only enough to keep the families clothed, fed, transient and in need of the next job. In some cases the business owner, who provides shelter and also sells the families their provisions, will charge them more than they earn, enslaving them in a perpetual state of debt from which the only escape is flight. Sixty-thousand men and boys work in the charcoal industry of Brazil. Most men retire by the time they are in their forties because the work is so backbreaking. It is the exceptional man who is strong enough to continue this type of labor into later life.

However, of all the men interviewed in THE CHARCOAL PEOPLE, one thing resonates for them all. They are proud of the work that they do, and are devoted to their families, virtuously taking care of them while hoping for a better life for their children. They encourage their children to get more out of life by going to school. With the help of UNICEF, the Federal government now gives each family $25 per month per child to send their children to school. That is more than the child would have earned, had he worked for the entire month.

Child labor in the iron industry goes back to the 1920s when with the low cost of labor, production was able to expand sweeping away the Atlantic Forest and savannas, leaving an area the size of France utterly depleted. In the 1970's the Brazilian pig iron industry was forced to begin reforestation projects using eucalyptus. Financed by the World Bank, eucalyptus was planted in the state of Mato Grosso do Sul for a cellulose industry that never developed. The iron industry then used the wood for charcoal, setting up charcoal centers and enslaving both workers and their children to breathe toxic gases, drink contaminated water and live in constant fear of dangerous working conditions.

In the 1980's the press exposed this horrendous situation and UNICEF and ABRINC stepped in to eradicate child labor and slow the destruction of the rain forest. UNICEF helped the Brazilian government construct school systems near the forests of Mato Grosso do Sul. Finally, in 1996 the government decided to give each family $25 per month per child as an initiative to send them to school. The program has been successful in that region. And as a result, the government is raising money to expand the concept to other areas of the country.

Today there are eleven pig iron factories fully operational in the region of the Amazon Rain Forest, and permission has been granted for additional companies to begin production. As the unstoppable pig iron industry moves into the Amazon, slavery and continued child labor move along with it.

How long it will take to eradicate the system depends on the willingness of the pig iron industry, finally, to respect human life. In an effort to help educate the children, perhaps giving them a chance at a better life, all the proceeds from the film The Charcoal People are going to UNICEF. ●

BELLY DANCING AND OTHER PURSUITS...

By Jan Silver

As the weather cools, my thoughts turn to—food. Fall foods (warm apple pie, pumpkin pie, sweet potato pie) beckon. It's too cold for early-morning tennis and often too foggy for early walks on the beach before work. My weight is going up. My options? Eat less or try a new exercise program. I'm not ready to forsake my favorite comfort desserts yet, so I decided to start looking for another form of exercise.

I've done aerobics, tai chi, yoga. I need something to stimulate my bored mind and chubby body. I see an advertisement in the local newspapers for unusual exercise classes at the Ross School, a private East Hampton campus. They are offering public classes in several types of yoga, tai chi, meditation, Chinese healing techniques, singing lessons and Middle Eastern dance. The course fees are modest. I decide that Middle Eastern dance – known to most of us as "belly dancing" – should burn the most calories and so I sign up for a workshop on Sunday, October 22, with Shamira Shahinian.

The workshop is at the school's Center for Well-Being, a contemporary glass/wood/stone building which blends quietly into its surrounding woods. I arrive a few minutes before the workshop starts and I'm told to remove my shoes. The floors are all handset stone and mosaics – magnificent but cold on the feet. The registrar directs me to leave the shoes in a cubby near the entrance. (I learn later that most Ross students carry Chinese slippers in their book bags to wear inside because, in all Ross buildings, one must remain hard-shoeless—a very Eastern approach which also immediately removes the materialistic competition of who has the latest footwear.)

The entry floor of the building has a gymnasium-sized room with two walls of glass. It's used for large phys. ed classes and sports such as basketball. At present, the bleachers are pushed back and at least a hundred yoga mats are rolled up in concentric circles across the entire floor awaiting Monday's early-morning yoga class. The belly dancing is downstairs.

At the lower level, I pass a handsome library, a meditation area with benches and an indoor carp-filled pool, another multi-purpose room with mirrored walls at either end, and a state-of-the-art exercise machine area. The hall is lined with inlaid wood lockers and niche seating areas. Handsome indigenous art from around the world hangs on the walls.

I go to the multi-purpose room where a lithe, graceful brunette in black tank-top, tights and sandals is setting out bangle-fringed scarves. She is smiling and she introduces herself as Shamira, our instructor. About fifteen attractive young women drift in. I am at least twenty years older than anyone else in the class but, hey, my body still moves.

Shamira suggests we select a hip scarf and tie it around our hips, if we wish. (I really need a hip shawl!) Everyone else seems to have taken the class before except me. They all rush to get a scarf – Shamira puts a red-sequined sash around her narrow hips – and I am left with a sheer white number that has golden coins along the edges. It's the perfect accessory for my tres chic black-tee-shirt-and-footless-tights ensemble.

Shamira turns on some harem-sounding flute music with a distinct drum beat and we begin. There's a brief warm-up and then she shows us the basics: how to place your legs and feet, how to swivel the hips, how to work the arms. Mercifully, I'm standing near the front and out of mirror view. I can't see how I look, so I jump into the routines enthusiastically. Remember, I'm dancing so I can eat whatever I want.

Well, it's becoming hard work for legs, feet, arms, spine and hips. Shamira says "we are unlocking the magic and mystery of true feminine energy." Does that include sweat? I am beginning to sweat—oops, make that gently perspire—just like in an aerobic fitness class. (We can sip water in between routines and I get a jugful.)

The combination of steps becomes more complicated. The music gets faster. Occasionally I glance at all the younger, thinner women in the class and I know that I'm the klutziest as well as the oldest, but I'm hanging in there to burn calories (while my husband is home watching football and making dinner).

There is one long break where my fellow bellies rush to buy new bangly scarves, arm bracelets, music cassettes and advanced instruction videos. One video is Bellydancing: The Sensuous Workout and includes a music video at the end called "Harem Heat" ($29.95 plus shipping and handling).

I really like belly dancing – there are many styles Egyptian, Indian, Iranian, etc. – but I'll have to see how my 50-year-old hips feel tomorrow morning when I try to get out of bed. If I can't move, I'll have to return to tai chi or yoga class or maybe take "The Natural Singer" workshop.

The Ross School is located off Route 114 in Goodfriend Park between Sag Harbor and East Hampton. There are 242 students in grades 5 through 12 who study a curriculum of math, arts, literature, cultural history, languages, science, and physical education (which they call "wellness"). All the facilities are built to complement the local environment. Several Wellness courses and performing arts events are open to the public. For a schedule of programs, call the Center at (631) 907-5163 or 907-5311, or log onto their website www.rossinstitute.org. ●

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

OBSERVATIONS OF A NEW ISLANDER # 130 NEWMONIKS, WEDDINGS AND HALLOWEEN

Newmoniks, or spelled correctly, pneumonics are rhymes, phrases or catchy sounds that help us remember things.

This weekend marks the end of daylight savings time. For most of my life, I never quite knew if we were supposed to set the clocks forward or back in spring or fall. Not having this knowledge was extremely advantageous. I could always be late for work the next day on the viable excuse that I A) didn't know I was supposed to reset my clock, or B) I set it the wrong way. Either way, you could catch a break twice a year using this time honored method.

It worked great until somebody threw a daylight savings time pneumonic at me. It wasn't technically a pneumonic, but close enough to do the same irreparable damage. Pnuemonics go through your ears, directly into the cortex of your brain and stick there forever. Don't believe me? Okay, see if you can avoid finishing this phrase… "plop, plop, fizz, fizz, oh…", how about… "A horse is a horse, of…" Gotcha.

This cruel person said, "Oh, it's easy, just remember, 'Spring Ahead, Fall Behind'." Screwed. I've remembered how to set my clocks ever since.

Ever notice when you're alphabetizing things, you MUST sing the alphabet to yourself? About a year ago someone told me the tune to "ABC" is the same as "Twinkle Twinkle Little Star". I had never known that before. I probably could have lived my entire life without needing to know that. But now that I know it, I find that when I'm alphabetizing using the "ABC" song, I will throw in a chorus of "Twinkle Star." Why? Because it's there, in the third fold of my right lobe.

I always loved, but couldn't quite remember the pneumonic about "Thirty days has September, April, June and November..." I was catching onto it until, one day, while I was still working as a psych nurse, a patient was reciting it. I listened because I was still trying to memorize it myself. But he recited it a little differently and it has stayed in my head exactly as he said it that day. "Thirty days has September, April, June and No wonder, all the rest have thirty-one except for Grandma, 'cause she drives a Buick."

There was a popular pneumonic in action on Shelter Island on Saturday night at the famous Chequit Halloween Party, "One tequila, two tequila, three tequila, floor." It was a terrific party. I complimented John at the bar on his dashing pirate outfit, he said, "Hey, that's why I get the big money." John is a bonafide sweetie. He kept me plied with Shirley Temples (double cherries) all night… they make me loose and wild, and he knows it.

There was a guy dressed as the McDonald's Hamburgler, very cute. A gorgeous woman was dressed as a cigarette girl, very clever. Peter Reich came with tire tracks across his chest and one arm dangling off. He muttered, "They swerved for a Plover." Wille Nelson was there. Marla "Mary" Maples too. A man named Sam came as a Dark & Stormy Knight.

Three women came as brides, one of them for real. It was bizarre to see this nicely dressed wedding party mixed in with the Chequit Alumni in costumes. Imagine spending your wedding night at a Halloween Costume Party? Imagine showing THAT Bridal Album to your kids in ten years? "And here's Mommy next to Frankenstein...and there's Aunt Ruby being assaulted by a Pirate… and dancing on the bar is…"

My brother David came as the Borg, Seven of Seven. He rigged some tubing so he could drink through his finger, a talent he gladly demonstrated with your drink.

Hands down the best costume was the man who came as Hermann Munster. Incredible make-up, flat top head, bolts in the neck, perfectly square shoulders, platform shoes, even a giant metal lunchbox. I thought of the line from Young Frankenstein when Teri Garr says, "Ya, und he must have an enormous schvanschtooker."

I came as the Queen of the Sea. I looked in my jewelry box for anything I might have that looked cheap, garish and nautical… gee, what a challenge… I had more than I could wear. I collect seahorses, so I wore my whole collection. Good thing I have a great barrier reef to accommodate thirty seahorses. My favorite seahorse is a gift from Beverly Walz, a big black seahorse with red rhinestones. I wore it in my hair, next to my rhinestone tiara with a beanie baby seahorse riding on top. Hey, I never run the risk of not being noticed… Always thinking ahead, I also pinned a beanie baby eel to my sweater. Why? In case I met an eligible man of course. Men never want to cop a seahorse, but they always want to cop an eel… ●

elaine k.g. benson, her daughter's column

It's the time of year when the days get shorter and the chores seem to get longer. The heating system in my house is being repaired. It wasn't a problem last week but with this new cold weather I'm anxious to see a solution. The desire for a comfortable warm house is compounded by the arrival of a houseguest. My guest called from France last week. He asked about the weather. It was raining in Paris. I told him it was beautiful and warm. I talked about kayaking. It seems that almost as soon as I hung up the wind came whistling in and the seas kicked up. The fishing isn't as good as it was last week and I'm not anxious to go out kayaking in the chop. My houseguest arrived in New York with a light jacket and called to tell me I had let him down. Fortunately, he arrived at the apartment of some friends who could lend him some warmer clothing.

I've been bringing plants in from my yard all week. Yesterday, I went to my mother's house and brought the last of the plants in to the "greenhouse" room. That's only a stop gap measure because the room is unheated and the plants will have to be moved before the cold weather really sets in. It's hard to move the plants to an upstairs bedroom. I have seven orchids in bloom and I prefer to live with them. I've moved most of the plants in at my own house. There comes a time in the winter when there are more plants in my house than I can live with. The plants take over the dining room and tend to move the human beings out. I just gave a few plants to a friend who moved into a second floor apartment. He's been living in a basement apartment for years and didn't have enough light for houseplants.

I don't know if anyone else is compulsive about bringing in their yard plants. One autumn I dug up all the impatiens in my mother's yard and filled the glassed in porch with colorful hanging baskets. I was told it would be a fruitless effort. Not so, the flowers bloomed all winter and made the house cheerful. This year I find myself dividing the plants and repotting them as I bring them in. I have run out of potting soil twice and I'm still not finished.

This spring I brought seeds for Mexican fan palms up from a tree in my yard in Mexico. The palms sprout well down South so I thought it would be fun to try my luck here. I have a pot that has been outside all summer. There are about thirty fan palms sprouting. I never thought they would all germinate. If the palms continue to thrive, we may have a palm farm here in Bridgehampton. My husband once told me that if we weren't careful, there would be no more room in the house for him. I think you can take the idea of a " green thumb" too far. I can't bear the idea of giving up on the plants but I see that this is getting to be insane. If I didn't travel it would be worse. There would be no stopping me.

I promised a friend who lives in the city that I'd go by his house in Bridgehampton and bring in his potted plants. I must not have enough to keep me busy. The truth is, I think it's my job to protect the plants.

I'm still waiting for the plumber. It gets colder as we speak. I know it will get dark early now because we set the clocks back. There are precious few hours of light available to do yard work and I long for long warm summer evenings. It's time to light a fire and curl up with a good book but this house has no fireplace and I find myself warming my hands by the oven. This will never do. I don't think it is fair to bring a houseguest into a cold house. It's times like this that I wish I had fur like my cat Michel. She doesn't seem bothered at all.

I wish you a warm winter with lots of houseplants and logs for the fire, warm soup, tropical dreams and someone to curl up with next to a cozy fireplace. I'm thinking of mittens, polar fleece and my down vest.

When in New York

review: proof

David Auburn is a young American playwright wise beyond his years. With Proof, which debuted at the Manhattan Theatre Club last spring and just re-opened at Broadway's Walter Kerr Theatre, Auburn explores a child's devotion to a parent vs. the child's need for independence – and he succeeds dramatically in this moving and sensitive play.

The playwright gets great assistance from the small but masterful cast of Proof. Mary-Louise Parker, best known to New York theater audiences for award-winning performances in Prelude to A Kiss and How I Learned to Drive (and to moviegoers for roles in Boys on the Side, Grand Canyon, Fried Green Tomatoes among others), plays Catherine, the daughter of a brilliantly accomplished but mentally ill University of Chicago math professor. She has lovingly and devotedly taken care of her father since her mother died, giving up a scholarship to Northwestern University and her own career goals.

The play's action begins on the eve of her twenty-fifth birthday. Her father has just died and she is alone in their old house near the university. She is depressed.

In flashback scenes, Larry Bryggman plays the father, Robert. He is tender and loving with Catherine, but displays great frustration and bewilderment towards the illness that usurps his career and his life. Parker and Bryggman are so poignant in some of their scenes together. "Love is a very difficult occupation," he gently reminds her.

Hal (Ben Shenkman), a former graduate student of Robert's and now a math instructor at the university, discovers a new and wondrous mathematic proof among years of Robert's unpublished notebooks that Catherine allows him to see. Hal wants to publish the proof and give Robert posthumous credit. "Math is a young man's game," Hal callously states.

Catherine's sister Claire (Johanna Day) arrives from New York after Robert's death to take care of his estate and bring the depressed Catherine back with her. But Catherine is slowly coming out of her depression and daring to discover who she is and what she really wants.

The dialogue between the sisters often gets to the combustion point before Claire backs off and the sexual and professional relationships between Hal and Catherine get quite heated. This reviewer was never, ever bored for one moment watching this story unfold.

John Lee Beatty's set of a 1920s Romanesque city house, enhanced by Pat Collins' lighting and John Gromada's sound and music, contributes much to the mood of the play. Accomplished director Daniel Sullivan gets noteworthy performances from his four actors. He plays up the comic lines and double-entendres in the script to keep the action moving.

It took more than six Broadway producers including Robert Berlind, Jujamcyn Theaters, Daryl Roth and the Manhattan Theatre Club to bring this fine play to a major Broadway house. It's good to have a well-written, insightful play by a young American playwright on Broadway this year.

One of the leading social events of the fall season is the Princess Grace Awards, which I have seen grow from a modest event to one that overflows the Grand Ballroom of the Waldorf. ## YOUR GUIDE TO NORTH FORK WINERIES AND VINEYARDS

WINE TASTING RESULTS THAT MAY SURPRISE YOU

By Roy Bradbrook

North Fork red, white and sparkling wines head to head against top French first growth Bordeaux, Champagne, and Burgundies sounds like putting up the US soccer team against the might of the French world champions. Recent events in the world of wine, however, have caused some consternation among the experts.

You will almost certainly have seen the recent advertisements from Lenz Winery extolling the merits of various very well known and respected French wines but delivering the punch line, 'But The Lenz Came First.' Now, we all are only too familiar with the hype of advertising today and no doubt many have thought to themselves as they read this, 'Where's the catch?' So, to find out more of the facts behind the ads, I met up with Peter Carroll, the owner of Lenz Winery.

Peter is the Managing Director of a Management Consultancy company operating in the Financial Services field and he has owned Lenz since 1988. In response to my query he told me, "I moved from liking the product to finding the whole subject more and more interesting, so I purchased this winery and I kept the name because it already had a good reputation and the name has a certain 'Kodak' quality in being very memorable and it sounds right for a winery. Frankly, when I became a winery owner, I never dreamed that it would take so long to make it a profitable enterprise. When you take into account all of the capital tied up in wine that is waiting to be released, you can see why sometimes winemaking is referred to as 'Chateau Cash Flow.' Unless you are content to make jug-wines this is always going to be a problem. Sometimes, when I take visitors round the vineyards at this time of year, they will ask about the bunches of grapes laying on the ground. They are quite shocked to find that this is something we do quite deliberately to help in our ongoing quest to make the very best quality wines."

I then asked Peter Carroll about the wine tastings which he features in their advertising. "It all started back in 1996 when our '93 reds had just been released. We had made some significant changes, particularly in the vineyards and I wondered just how good we were as a result. One night I set up an informal tasting session, mainly with our own staff and we blind tasted our wines and some very good French wines. When we analyzed the results, I won't say that I was amazed but I was very gratified to see how well we had performed. The next step was to organize a tasting using outside people and the first one was held at the Tribeca Grill. This was double blind with the participants not even knowing the region being tested. Again, we had excellent results. We did not win all the flights but many of the tasters were surprised when the results were unveiled. Then we had a tasting in Paris and one of the most encouraging results from this was that one of the leading French wine writers and critics expounded on the thesis that French producers must not get greedy and imagine that they have a product which is incapable of being challenged from other countries and regions such as Long Island in the US!"

In their most recent blind tasting, in mid-August of this year, they invited nine professional tasters, including sommeliers from top restaurants such as Jean Georges, Windows on the World, Ben Benson's, Veritas, Ducasse and the Gramercy Tavern, together with the chef/owner of Lutece and the host of the Food Network television program to the Gramercy Tavern. "This tasting was semi-blind because the tasters knew which wines were in each flight they tasted but, of course, they did not know which wine was in each glass," said Peter Carroll. He continued, "There were five flights, each of four wines and the order of tasting the wines was, Sparkling; Medium bodied Chardonnay; Full bodied Chardonnay; Cabernet Sauvignon and Merlot. We asked the tasters to record their scores based on the 'Robert Parker' scale but not to discuss the wines among themselves. Using this method we wanted to see, first of all if they could pick the more expensive French wines out from our own."

Studying the detailed results of the average scores can only be described as amazing, particularly if you concentrate on the flights where the Lenz wines went up against some of the greatest names in wine lore such as Chateau Latour and Chateau Petrus, which retail for anything between eight and eighteen times the price of the Lenz wines they were tested against. Peter Carroll disclosed that they compiled all of the tasters detailed test results but that they had agreed, beforehand, that only the summarized results and non-attributable comments would be published. "The tasters were only able to correctly identify the French and the Lenz wines sixty-two percent of the time and except for the sparkling

DAN'S WINE LIST

Shoulder to shoulder they went. The upstart from Long Island and the vaunted French champion. Into the night the tasters slugged, er sipped, it out. No quarter was given, none asked. The dust settled and so, unmistakeably, was the matter. Lenz wines had triumphed over Chateau Petrus in all but one flight of the competition. An anatomy of a tasting. p. 35.

Fine art and fine wine have complemented each other through the ages. So it was only appropriate that Castello di Borghese / Hargrave Vineyard's bronze exhibition of the works of sculptor Christopher Ward should have invited comparisons to Etruscan and Greek antiquities. p. 37.

Bronze Sculpture Exhibits Enhanced By Vineyard Setting

By Roy Bradbrook

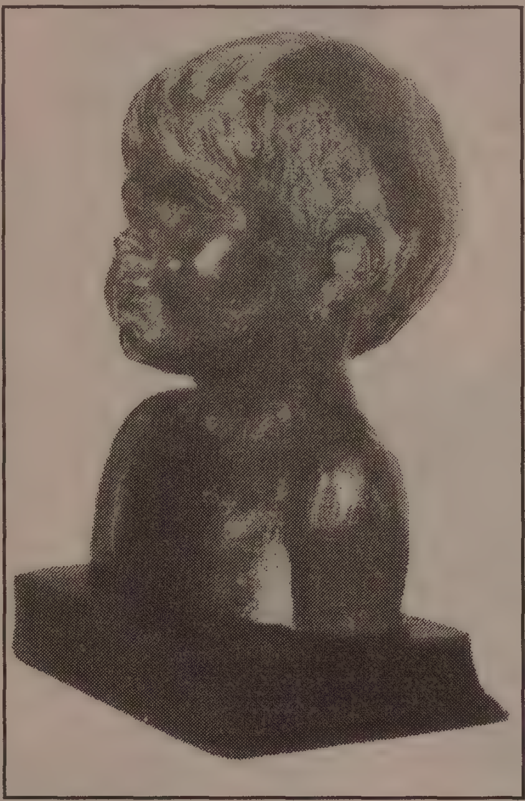
The recent exhibition of bronze sculptures by the artist Christopher Ward at the Castello Di Borghese Hargrave Vineyard gave visitors the opportunity to see the work of a sculptor who has exhibited in Paris, New York and Philadelphia over the last twenty years.

The setting of the old potato barn which now forms a part of the winery had a simplicity accentuated by cleverly subdued but accented lighting which set off the exhibits to perfection.



Christopher Ward is the first to agree that his international childhood was a major factor in developing his artistic potential. "I spent my boyhood in Iran, before the revolution and also had the opportunity to spend time in Paris, Rome and Greece, so I had a very cosmopolitan upbringing. My mother has always been keenly interested in art and she made sure that I had exposure to many different schools and styles from many countries. I will always remember" he said with a smile, "the day that she took me to my first life class and how, when the model dropped her robe I did not know where to look. In fact, I think that I ended up drawing everything in the room but the model!"

After returning to America to complete his education, Christopher Ward studied fine art at Cornell and California State but then he worked in the business world for the next twenty years before he took the decision to move into the art world full time. He had classical training in drawing and sculpture and found that working with bronze was the way in which he could best express himself. Now most bronze sculptors produce the wax mold which is then passed to a foundry for the bronze to be poured. Christopher Ward does the whole process himself. "The technical side of working with bronze always fascinated me and I was fortunate to be able to get the opportunities to learn about casting techniques and then to put them into practice. It was difficult at first to get a foundry to let me do this because pouring molten metal is potentially a dangerous process but I persevered and I believe that my ability to perform the whole process helps me produce work which reflects my vision."

The bronzes are produced by the classical 'lost wax' process and Christopher Ward has harnessed one of the potential problems of using that process to reflect and develop his own original style. "When you pour the metal," he went on to explain, "sometimes, if the metal does not totally fill the plaster cast or if the mold cracks, you can end up with, what are known as 'Flashings.' These take the form of fringes which radiate from parts of the bronze. Now many sculptors will clean these off as part of the finishing of the piece but I will often leave these on the final piece because of the spontaneity and uniqueness of their shapes and the way in which they add to the visual statement."

The results are striking. Many of Christopher Ward's works look as though they could well have come from Etruscan or Greek excavations, especially with the often missing limbs which Christopher deliberately engineers during the casting process as a further means of adding an extra dimension to the work. They have an air of antiquity which is complemented by the flashings and they pose many questions to the viewer, rather like laying on one's back on the grass on a summer's day and cloud gazing. There is an overall sense of wistfulness and yearning about the female figures such as the reclining nude 'Nocturne' and the beautiful head and shoulders piece he calls 'Memories'. 'Aegean Memory' brought to mind the legend of Aphrodite, the Greek goddess of love, rising from the sea on a bed of foam at Cythera, to which she returned, once a year to dive into the water and emerge as fresh as on the first day she appeared.

Apart from these evocative pieces, Christopher also produces bronze portraits such as the one on show of G. Gordon Meade Easby, a direct descendant of the Civil War General George Gordon Meade. This exemplified the way that the sculptor is able to portray the character of the subject. This technique is also used in the production of children's busts, which he says are now proving very popular and at a cost of around $5000 are not prohibitively expensive, when you consider the results where he captures the innocence and beauty of the children in a medium which will last for many, many years to come.

Marco and Anne Marie Borghese, the owners of Castello di Borghese Hargrave vineyards, are to be complimented on making this show available for art lovers on Long Island. •

Results

wine flight, Lenz wines received the highest scores in each flight. The analysis also shows that there was a scoring bias against the Lenz wines depending on whether or not the taster had correctly identified the source of the wine."

So, at the end of the day, what does this all mean? There will obviously be doubters who still will assail the methodology, although when you look at the credentials of the tasting panel you must ask yourself if they would agree to take part in a tasting if they were not professionally happy with the way it had been structured.

Similarly, if you raise a question about whether the French wines were representative of good vintages or not, again, surely one is entitled to expect even a modest year for a Petrus or a Latour to show well against any wine in the world, especially when the astronomical price difference is taken into account. Indeed, talking later to Tom Morgan, Lenz national sales manager, he told me, "After one of our earlier tastings, a very well known wine writer sent us a fax saying in essence, 'How dare you even try to compare your wines with wines like Petrus - it was as though we had committed an act of sacrilege!"

There is no doubt that results such as these are not welcome in many quarters of the world of wine but then iconoclasts seldom are. Tom had an apt comment, " The world of wine is full of surprises because sometimes if you are unprejudiced you get much more than you expect. An uncorked unlabelled bottle of wine can be a danger to many a wine expert."

Will these tastings stop those who can afford them from buying Latour or Petrus? Probably not. However hard you look into these results and even if you apply all the discounting factors within the limits of probability, the salient facts are nine of the best wine palates in New York City rated the Lenz wines above the undoubted world class wines. Wine lovers who look for quality at an affordable price have to take note of these results because at the end of the day it is their pocket and their palate which will point them in the right direction. Remember also, that in an admittedly less professional setting, as we reported in a previous issue, Claire and Jim McCarthy and their friends came up with the same result when they tasted their prize bottle of Le Montrachet against Lenz Gold Label Chardonnay.

Having answered all of my questions where I tried to be as adversarial as possible to try and find a fallacy in their results, Peter and Tom then invited me to attend their next tasting series as an observer. I have to admit that this is something I am eagerly looking forward to because at the moment, every time you look at the results, you may conclude that US wines, represented by the team at Lenz, are giving the French world champions a real run for their money. •

By Susan Simm

At first glance, The Wines of Long Island appears to be another visitor's guide to Long Island wineries. The book contains photographs that are, in many cases, postcard-worthy. A closer look, however, reveals amusing anecdotes, personal revelations and competitive spirits. Alex Hargrave who, along with his wife Louisa, was a pioneer in the modern Long Island wine industry, is described as having such a "playful intellect [that] one couldn't be sure [if] he was engaging in hyperbole when he claimed that their new endeavor was guided by the ancients." On a different note, nightclub owner Alan Barr, former owner of the now-defunct Le Reve in Southampton - "a pompous, seventeen million dollar... Norman-style chateau-winery" – claimed that "only he knew how to make money in the wine business" in the Hamptons. Co-authors Edward Beltrami and Philip Palmedo provide a wealth of information, both historical and practical, while interjecting the text with humorous observations to avoid weighing the reader down with too many technical details. All East End vineyards, along with Villa Banfi in Old Brookville, are represented. Vineyard owners, who are in some cases also the winemakers, are a somewhat diverse group but they all have two traits in common: high hopes and deep pockets. As the old saying goes, the only way to make a small fortune in the wine business is to start with a large fortune. But those who are making it through hard work, research, patience and a little luck, are finally being recognized for their efforts, both professionally and financially.

The history of winemaking on Long Island goes back farther than most of us realize. In a chapter entitled, "The Historical Legacy," the authors provide some interesting historical background. They discuss how the English colonists, "as they spread south and west from New England in the 1630s, started to explore the coast and bays... including the 'Great River' between the forks." In 1639, "engineer-adventurer Lion Gardiner acquired his island from the Montauk Indians and changed its name from the Isle of Wight to Gardiner's Island." As more settlers arrived on the North Fork, the Corchaug Indians, who had been "hunting and fishing there for at least 4000 years... weakened by war and disease, acquiesced in the Europeans' occupation of the land." On the South Fork, "bones from graves have been dated to 1290 B.C." By the 1750s, Francis Fourinier, a Frenchman living in Southold, "was said to be very successful in setting out the grape and making it grow". He is credited with planting "some 4700 vines in the 1760s." By the early twentieth century, however, winemaking efforts both upstate and on Long Island were "hobbled by the onset of Prohibition in 1919." When Prohibition was repealed, in 1933, "the U.S. wine industry was in a shambles."

In 1972, Alex and Louisa Hargrave, both graduates of Harvard and the products of prominent families (read: deep pockets), bought a sixty-six acre potato farm in Cutchogue and so initiated the modern Long Island wine movement. Peter and Pat Lenz followed, buying land in Southold in 1978 and Lyle Greenfield in 1979, purchasing land in Bridgehampton. Early reactions were mixed: "Objective judgement was hard to discern between the romantic's enthusiasms for the new [wines] and the sophisticate's disdain for anything grown within 2000 miles of New York." This is no longer true. Although Long Island's wine industry is only twenty-five years old, a blip in terms of Europe's wine history, respect and attention are being bestowed on wines produced on both forks.

This is not to say that everything has been easy and all ventures successful. Aside from Alan Barr whose failure, it could be argued, was based more on ignorance than anything else, Lyle Greenfield, creator of the Bridgehampton Winery (read: high hopes), failed despite "creativity, the handsomest labels in the region, expert winemaking and endless energy." It is clear, in retrospect, that the vineyard was "handicapped severely by poor drainage and... low areas that captured the cold air in spring and fall." The small-scale winery business is marginal to begin with and, the authors observe, "it is doubtful that anyone with limited financial resources could have survived the early decision to invest in a vineyard in the wrong place." Although the South Fork, after the failure of both Le Reve and Bridgehampton, seemed inhospitable to vineyard creation, three wineries are proving that it can, indeed, be done; Channing Daughters in Bridgehampton, Woiffer Estates in Sagaponack and Duck Walk in Southampton. Duck Walk, the former Le Reve, was purchased and rejuvenated in 1994 by Dr. Herodotus Damianos, founder of Pindar Vineyards on the North Fork. His sons, Jason and Alex, now run it. Jason, who is charge of winemaking after having attended the University of Bordeaux, is "convinced that Long Island needs to look to the maritime province of Bordeaux for inspiration, rather than California since there are more similarities [in terms of climate and landscape] between Bordeaux and the Twin Forks than perhaps anywhere else." This is an echo of an observation made by the Hargraves back in the 1970s.

More and more, Long Island wines are being compared to those of Europe. In fact, Hargrave Vineyard was purchased in 1999 by Marco Borghese, a member of the aristocratic Italian family. He decided to purchase the vineyard after he "came to realize the great potential of Long Island as a wine region." More recently, Gristina Vineyards, also in Cutchogue, was sold to Vincent Galluccio by its founder, Jerry Gristina who "describes himself as a wine collector who let his hobby run amok." An article about a blind tasting in the New York Times in 1991 compared Gristina's 1989 Chardonnay to a Chassagne Montrachet, referring to the great white wines of Burgundy.

What does it take to create a successful vineyard on Long Island's East End? Well, "everything has to be right: the site, the financing, the selection and management of the vines, the wine making, the weather, the marketing..." But, as you will discover while exploring The Wines of Long Island, it takes even more, something intangible that cannot be quantified. Louisa Hargrave, who describes herself as the "chemist" of the Hargrave Vineyard, expresses it perfectly. "I am the science," she said, "but Alex is the magic." •

Ternhaven Cellars – The 'Boutiquette' Winery Of The North Fork

By Roy Bradbrook

As the wineries of Long Island grow in both reputation and acreage and as we hear of the major and very welcome expansion plans of many of the new owners, it is also nice to know that the smaller wineries still have a presence and a niche here because they remind us of the pioneers who came with their vision and started this burgeoning industry.

Ternhaven Cellars, at Greenport, is one of the smallest wineries on Long Island, the only one to have its wine making facility virtually in the town center and also is the most easterly winery on the North Fork. It may also be unique in having a renowned Professor of Economics as not only its owner but also its wine maker.

Harold Watts is very proud of what he refers to as his 'Boutiquette Winery.' Growing up on a farm in Oregon gave him a love for the land, but this was put to one side as he went from college in Eugene to Yale for a post graduate degree in Economics and eventually to a Doctorate and six years of teaching at Yale. His career continued with time at Wisconsin and also a period carrying out research in Norway. Altogether, Harold spent 14 years at Wisconsin and became the first Director of the Institute for Research on Poverty which concentrates on the nature, causes and cures of poverty in the US. After five years in this post, Harold was offered a post as Professor at Columbia University and after taking a year in Europe on a Guggenheim fellowship he arrived in New York just in time to miss the big fire work display for the Bi-centennial celebrations. "Columbia offered me this wonderfully large apartment on Riverside Drive which I really enjoyed until I retired from Columbia in 1998," he explained. "It also allowed me to start to become more personally involved in wine making."

Some years before, Harold had become reunited with some longtime friends who now were operating a winery in Pennsylvania and, in his words, became a vineyard 'Groupie'!

The knowledge Harold acquired from working with his friends he decided to put to good use by having his first small scale winery in the heart of Manhattan. "This apartment on Riverside Drive was about 2500 square feet and boasted a maids room. This turned out to be an ideal place to start my wine making so I went out and bought grapes or brought back must from a winery. I must have made about 30 to 40 gallons a year and became more and more proficient."

Now, Harold Watts had a friend who lived on Shelter Island and this introduced him to Eastern Long Island and the very new vineyards planted by the pioneers such as the Hargraves and the Gristinas. He purchased 5 acres of land at Alvah's Lane in Cutchogue when it was still being used as a potato farm; but then the farmer went bankrupt. So, in 1983, Harold decided to plant vines on the land and he contracted to have merlot and cabernet sauvignon planted and at a later date added three rows of cabernet franc.

The first commercial vintage wines produced from these vines were made by Russell Hearn in 1994 at Pellegrini who also made the '95 and '96 vintages. Harold wanted to build a winery and tasting room next to the vineyards but he said ruefully, "The town had an ordinance that you had to have a minimum of ten acres and I only had five so that was that. I had a house in Greenport and I found that a service station was for sale so I decided to turn this into my winery. Greenport has so many visitors and new restaurants, hotels and stores are opening, so there is a great resurgence in the town. Coincidentally, at the time I decided to move into winemaking myself, my friends in Pennsylvania were on the point of retiring and wanted to sell their equipment. I bought it all and this formed the basis of my winery. I had already decided only to make reds and this meant that I did not need to put in refrigeration equipment. With a lot of help and encouragement from all my friends, our first vintage in Greenport was made in 1997. This was a good year in many ways, and I was very proud when we were awarded the Gold Medal this year at the New York State show for our 97 Claret D'Alvah which was made from 55% Merlot, 35% Cabernet Sauvignon and 20% Cabernet Franc." (Claret, incidentally, is the name by which red wines from the Bordeaux region of France were known for many years in England.) Ternhaven's '97 Merlot also won a Bronze Medal at this year's competition.

I asked Harold Watts how he liked the life of wine making compared to the world of academia. "I really had had my fill of economics as a full time career and the challenge of wine making is fascinating. I haven't totally divorced myself from teaching because Columbia asked me to develop their summer course for MPA (Master of Public Affairs) candidates and this has been a challenge in itself. I also am involved, as an expert, in a long running case brought by a group of Federal employees, residing outside the 48 states against the Federal Government. With all of this I have a well balanced, busy existence!"

To add to the busy part, Harold recently took over from Charles Massoud of Paumanok Vineyards, as President of the Long Island Wine Council and he gave this appraisal of the Council and his hopes for its development. "One of our key objectives is to try to get every winery and vineyard into the Council. We have appointed Jane Baxter Lynn as our Director she brings a wide range of relevant experience and appreciation of Long Island wines with her. We will work hard, as a council, to continue to work for the recognition of the excellence of Long Island wines. We also have to be fully aware of the major changes which have already affected the industry here and be sensitive to them. The major new investments are very welcome and will help to raise the public awareness of Long Island wines which is good for the whole region and not just our businesses."

The future for the wineries on Long Island is almost certain to be dominated by larger and larger groupings and acquisitions and this is necessary if Long Island wines are going to move onto the wider world stage and hold their own against competition. Hopefully, there will always be a place for people like Harold Watts and his 'Boutiquette' winery: a man who was able to take a dream and make it come true after having enjoyed many years of professional success in a totally unrelated area. There is no doubt that Harold Watts is very proud of his professorship and his achievements in the world of economics but from talking with him you may well come away with the feeling that asked to choose between the appellations of professor and winemaker, there is little doubt which would come out on top. •

"As Many Of New York's Top Restaurants and Retailers Have Discovered, LongIsland Can Produce Excellent Wine"

Wine Advocate, December, 1999

3000 miles closer than Napa Valley, 5,358 kilometers closer than Bordeaux, and only 70 miles from New York City, the world's most exciting and influential new wine region has emerged on Eastern Long Island.

As the praise and awards continue to accumulate, Long Island wines have become sought-after products in fine restaurants and wine shops from coast to coast and beyond national borders.

A Unique Climate

Once you have toured the area's vineyards and wineries you will better understand this astounding success. Snuggled between ocean, bay, and sound, few regions in the world offer the unique combination of climate, soil characteristics, and growing conditions so essential to the production of premium wines.

"The Graves-like subsoils, long and generally temperate growing seasons combined with a group of conscientious quality-driven producers, has resulted in some of the east coasts finest wines." ~World-wide wine authority, Robert Parker, December, 1999.

Since 1973 this beautiful maritime region has grown from one small vineyard to more than two dozen wineries, and will soon surpass 3000 acres of vines.

THROUGH THE GRAPEVINE

Ross' North Fork Restaurant
Route 48, Southold
765-2111

By Roy Bradbrook

The path that brought John Ross to Southold was a long and fairly complicated one. He studied at the School of Hotel Administration at Cornell. He became an instructor at the Cooks and Bakers School on Governor's Island and also worked in East Hampton, Groton and Ithaca before opening his own restaurant in Southold back in 1973.

When you walk into the restaurant you are immediately struck by the charmingly elegant and soothing decor with its shades of mauve, gray and white. This initial sense of well being is accentuated by the friendly welcome from the staff. Instinctively, you know that these are professional people who enjoy their work. The final touch is the pleasant and unobtrusive background music they play.

Talking before dinner to John Ross about the restaurant and his background, I could not resist asking him about one of his recent advertisements in which he quotes from the Welsh poet, Dylan Thomas. John told me of his love of poetry and how this particular poem spoke to him of the close relationship between man and the fruits of the earth and in the words of the poet, 'Oat and grape, born of sensual root and sap, my wine you drink, my bread you snap.' This lyricism and love of nature extends to the food which John Ross prepares.

For John, the local fruits of the earth are the basis for his menus. When we visited, it was the height of the pumpkin season, so it was natural that pumpkin would feature in many forms during the evening.

We started our meal with one of his specialty soups, pumpkin chardonnay. John explained that he prepares this from pumpkin, turnip, parsnip, leeks and onions with a chardonnay reduction let down with chicken stock. Pureed to perfection, the blend of delicate flavors was in total balance and the soup was everything that a fall or winter soup should be.

Escargots came plump and sizzling hot and well seasoned, but not to excess. One of the house specialties is the crusty home baked bread with hints of garlic and rosemary. It almost sat there saying, 'Eat me'! Despite its delicious texture and taste we managed to restrain ourselves, using a judicious quantity for the almost mandatory sopping up of the escargot juices but managed to refrain from eating too much and risking being unable to do justice to the undoubted delights to follow.

Moving back to the pumpkins, we then tasted one of the day's specials, a baked Jack B'Little pumpkin served with ratatouille and a goat cheese topping. This proved to be an exceptional combination and again, as we were to continue to find during the evening, John Ross is a master at blending tastes to perfection.

Now, some years ago, a local paper published John Ross' recipe for preparing scallops and this we have followed and have been delighted with the results, so we were anxious to taste these delicious mollusks prepared by the originator of the recipe. The sea scallops were gently cooked with lime juice and served on a bed of spinach and made us realize the gap that exists between the efforts of amateurs, however gifted, and a true professional!

With our meal, we had started with a glass of one of the excellent house white wines, a barrel fermented chardonnay produced by a local winery specially for the restaurant.

Fish is a prominent feature on the menu here and reflects whatever is most fresh. Local bluefish, (often maligned but excellent if cooked while truly fresh) was served with a horseradish and onion topping. The monkfish pan had been roasted with apple slices, cinnamon and cloves with pumpkin and crispy potatoes and both of these dishes were very good examples of the creativeness of the cooking.

With our next course we moved on to a glass of the house red wine, a Long Island merlot of excellent parentage and quality, to accompany what may well be regarded as John's signature dish, roast crisp Long Island duck served with a tart plum sauce, red cabbage and wild rice. We unanimously agreed that this was, without any doubt, the best duck we had ever tasted and again it was a superb dish for this season.

As we enjoyed our meal, we chatted with Isabel and Abigail, who were looking after our needs so well. Somehow, we got onto the subject of poetry again and learned that, on New Year's Eve, they hold a dinner and poetry reading in the restaurant which has always proved a great success. They both shared John's enthusiasm for poetry and their charming approach confirmed our growing feeling that this would be a meal and an evening we would long remember.

After a suitable pause we considered the desserts. Now the desserts here have been prepared for the last 25 years by Bonny Hoffner, who also bakes the bread. Faced with the usual difficult choices from a delectable list, we opted for warm cranberry apple and pear crisp and hot fudge pecan tart. All we could do was feast on these, enjoy our cups of hot strong espresso and say, 'Wow!'

Recommendation

It is very right that the contributions made to the Long Island wine industry by such pioneers as the Hargrave and the Gristinas should be lauded. When you look back twenty-seven years and appreciate that John Ross can be credited with being one of the first to bring fine dining to the North Fork, he too should receive equal recognition as a true pioneer and, moreover, one who has maintained his traditions of excellence over these years. The food he serves today is imaginative, excellent and makes full use of our treasured local produce.

Without any shadow of doubt, this restaurant should be on the 'A' list of anyone who enjoys good food in a charming atmosphere backed up by exceptional service and attention. First courses are between $7 and $10, soups $5 and main courses $18 to $23. They also serve an excellent value prix fixe lunch at $16. The restaurant is open at present from Thursday to Sunday for lunch and dinner and reservations are recommended. •

Major Italian Wine Producer Introduces Insulated Wine Bottle

By Roy Bradbrook

The Villa Sandi vineyards in Treviso, Italy is the home of a vast range of fine semi-sparkling and still wines. Villa Sandi, itself, is a magnificent Palladian villa built in 1622 and is now owned by the Moretti family.

Among the wines produced at Villa Sandi are Pinot Grigio, Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon and the sparkling Prosecco. Giancarlo Moretti-Polegato, who is the President of Villa Sandi, says "I have always believed that wine must be stored in ideal conditions in order for it to be enjoyed to the full and we go to great lengths here to do that. However, one night we were with friends and they said how good the wine was but that it was not cool enough. We set out to research this and found that even with a wine cooler the wine rapidly rises in temperature. After more work we came up with the concept of an insulating wine bottle. Now this had to be in keeping with the conventional bottle style and cost was also an important factor. We work with Europe's most prestigious bottle makers and came up with our patented "Glaxa" bottle."

Tests carried out by an Italian research institute confirmed that the Glaxa bottle held the wine temperature for a significantly longer time than the other methods. They claim that the ordinary bottle of white wine will go from six degrees Celsius to nineteen over a three hour period, with a wine cooler giving a somewhat better result of seventeen and a half degrees after three hours. Tests with the Glaxa bottle showed that the wine only rose to thirteen degrees after a three hour period.

Now, the wine industry is notoriously conservative and also the effect of using this new type of bottle on the total cost of the bottle of wine is not clear nor also whether modifications have to be made to existing bottle filling lines to enable them to run this new bottle. There seems to be no moves here on Long Island for this bottle to be used in the wineries and it has proven difficult to track down wine merchants who are stocking these wines in the Glaxa bottle to obtain any customer feedback.

The concept of the cooler bottle is an interesting one and possibly one more suited to counties with very high summer temperatures and without much air conditioning in the houses. For picnics and other outdoor events there may prove to be a greater demand for the Glaxa bottle with its insulating system. •

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

SLATER AT KEYES-ROBBINS/ BOURKE-WHITE AT PICTURE GALLERY

Two current exhibits prove the point that context plays an important part in the works' reception and interpretation. While the shows represent different media (painting at Keyes/ photography at Sag Harbor Picture Gallery) it's the setting that counts most.

We've seen a lot of David Slater's works already which are now at the Keyes-Robbins Gallery, except a few collage/assemblage examples ("Horse Canepole," "Jackson's Off His Rocker") yet those very signature pieces seem fresh. Julie Keyes' compact venue makes a difference here, the space overflowing with Ms. Keyes' funky, colorful plates, bowls, teapots and one particular glass mosaic in tile that's hung high off the ground. It's easy to miss, but then again, Ms. Keyes' works are forever full of surprises. Her designs recall Provence (even if a viewer has never been to France).

Entering this place, where pottery pieces often sit haphazardly on the floor, we find Mr. Slater's paintings and collages arranged in a similarly haphazard way. On second thought, however, we realize that their imagery somehow blends well with that haphazardness and the pottery's patterns although Mr. Slater hardly evokes the French countryside. His works suggest anything from Surrealism to Gauguin ("Clothes Horse") instead. Mr. Slater's art even has a few abstract flower images that signify a bit of Expressionism.

The resulting hodgepodge is a delight, allowing us to relish Mr. Slater's own funkiness in the midst of his salient social/political commentary.

The Sag Harbor Picture Gallery conveys an entirely different ambience, its starkness and formal organization quite appropriate for the gallery's impressive photography shows. This time around, and despite Margaret Bourke-White's reputation, her early photos contain no surprises. In a word, they do not possess an "edge" or little indication of what made Ms. Bourke-White so remarkable. Perhaps it's because it was too early in her career (the 1930s).

That's not to suggest that her finding beauty in ordinary (intrinsically "ugly) things was not aesthetically pleasing. Her pictures of New York's Garment District, a general merchandise store and plow blades not only provide a multidimensional America but also reveal extraordinary design elements.

Unfortunately, we've seen these kinds of photographs before, from all kinds of respected photographers. Ms. Bourke-White's figurative, documentary pictures do not seem remarkable even though she most certainly was.

Mr. Slater's work will be on view at The Gallery (on Rt. 114 across from Bolivar Watch). Call for dates of the show. (725-8610)

HONORING THE ARTIST: Sy Pollack

While New Jersey (and Sag Harbor) resident Sy Pollack is someone we may not know personally, chances are we've seen his bright yellow, three-wheel car on the local roads— a vehicle that's hard to miss even if our hobby doesn't include unusual cars.

Also hard to miss are Mr. Pollack's illustrations around town (he calls them "renderings) of such familiar places as the Bridgehampton Cafe, Water Mill's Mirkos Restaurant and Sag Harbor's new Paradise Cafe. His cover illustration this week of the building where Dan's Papers is housed now joins his collection.

To say that Mr. Pollack "gets around" a lot in his nifty car as well as with his art is not an exaggeration. "Getting around" also extends to his world-wide adventures. The truth is, traveling has always been important to Mr. Pollack and has brought him some valuable experiences.

Consider, for example, his sojourn in the Israeli Army some twelve years ago where Mr. Pollack kept himself busy drawing tanks or his one-day stint at the O. J. Simpson trial where he sketched the participants after winning a lottery to gain courtroom access. Or his involvement in a Colorado cattle drive where – you guessed it – he drew lots of cows enroute.

Mr. Pollack's penchant for unusual places and circumstances, pen and ink in hand, applies to other activities as well: his helping to design three of his homes including a ski house near the mountains, his current upside - down dwelling with a New York City view and a residence bearing three pod-like units in the British Virgin Islands.

Mr. Pollack's diverse art experiences make us wonder about his background and what his life might look like if he could choose a different career: "I went to Ohio State and studied to be an optician," he answers enthusiastically. "I also took art classes while I was there. After graduation, I worked with my father who had a wholesale-retail business producing and selling supplies to opticians. When Dad retired, I changed it to a retail business, with one-hour service.

"If I could have had another profession, I would have been an industrial designer or, better yet, an architect; I like doing architectural renderings for houses. I really never wanted to show in a gallery or a museum. The world is my museum. I would rather sit outside a museum and sketch than be inside a museum. Drawing what I do is a piece of cake."

Speaking of drawing, Mr. Pollack can't end the conversation without relating his experience with Al Hirschfield, a real master at "lines." "I commissioned him to draw a sketch of me. And then he let me draw him while I was there. I even kept the pen," Mr. Pollack says with relish.

It's apparent that Mr. Pollack has a real zest for living.

Take Five 2000

with Jan Silver

Theater, film, music, seminars and benefits are going on all over the East End this week. There is no such thing as "The Season" any more. Bay Street Theatre hosts a workshop on how children learn violence this Friday evening. Jimmy Buffett sings solo and "unplugged" for the Peconic Montessori School this Saturday in East Hampton (SOLDOUT!) and the Hampton Theater Company begins a two-week run of A.R. Gurney's The Dining Room at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on November 2. Best-selling novelist Louis Begley reads at Book Hampton, East Hampton, late Saturday afternoon and Professor John H. Bracey talks about African-American/Jewish relations at the Parrish Art Museum on Saturday, 6 p.m.

There are two interesting benefits this weekend: the South Fork Groundwater Task Force holds a buffet supper/mixed doubles tennis evening at East Hampton Indoor Tennis on Friday; and the Siena Spirituality Center at Villa Maria has a cocktail party and silent auction on Saturday. For details on these and other events, read on:

THEATER

The Hampton Theater Company, a most accomplished community theater troupe, is remounting its successful production of A.R. Gurney's comedic drama The Dining Room. The play is a humorous and poignant glimpse into the demise of the American WASP family. Showtimes are Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center this week and next. For tickets ($20 adults, $16 seniors and students), call 288-1500.

Mea culpa. I forgot to mention that the North Fork Community Theater is performing the suspense thriller Deathtrap in Mattituck (on Sound Avenue). The production opened last weekend and continues this weekend and next. Call their reservation line at 298-6328 for tickets ($10).

The Ross School has its own 'Fringe Festival' next Tuesday and Wednesday, 7: 30 p.m., in its Center for Well-Being, East Hampton. One-act avant-garde and fantasy plays written, acted and directed by students will be performed. Call 907-5311 for reservations (no admission charge).

Southampton College's Southampton Players will perform the Gershwins' musical comedy Anything Goes as their fall production. It opens next Thursday at the college's Avram Theater and plays through Sunday. Tickets are available at the door.

MUSIC

The mellow, classic rock of Jimmy Buffett ("Margaritaville," "Cheeseburger in Paradise," "Changes in Attitude, Changes in Latitude" and so many, many more hit songs) can warm the coldest heart. He will be singing solo and "unplugged" (acoustic guitar) at East Hampton's Guild Hall on Saturday, 8 p.m., in a benefit concert for the Peconic Montessori School. A margarita (natch!) reception and silent auction follow the performance. Tickets at $250 (or $500 if you want to meet the chief Parrothead) are soldout but you can call 725-4788 and leave your name in case of any cancellations.

My favorite local performers at local clubs (check Dan's Papers "Nightlife" column for exact times and dates): rock and rockabilly with The Lone Sharks (usually Thursday nights at Bridgehampton's Wild Rose Café); pop classic standards and mellow jazz with the Kipling Trio (Kipling's, Bridgehampton, on Fridays) and the Cardinali-Gene-Salter trio (Oyster Pond, Montauk, on Friday and World Pie, Bridgehampton, for Sunday brunch); Hunky Page on piano (weekends at The American Hotel, Sag Harbor); Diana Rogers on piano (late Sunday afternoon through dinner, The Maidstone Arms, East Hampton). Seven Nations, the rock band with bagpipes, will be at Amagansett's Stephen Talkhouse this Thursday, Nov. 2, at 8 p.m. ($20 admission) followed by an open mike for local performers.

SPEAKERS

The Lion & Lamb Project, a national organization dedicated to stopping the marketing of violence to children, will hold a workshop on "How Children Learn Violence and What You Can Do" on Friday, 7 p.m., at Sag Harbor's Bay Street Theatre. There is no admission charge, but reservations are necessary. There is a reception with the speakers following the workshop. For reservations call the box office at 725-0818.

Professor John H. Bracey Jr. of the Univ. of Mass. will speak about "Strangers and Neighbors," relations between African-Americans and Jewish Americans, at the Parrish Art Museum on Saturday at 6 p.m. The talk is in conjunction with the museum's current exhibit of art from the Jewish Museum. There is no admission charge and a reception follows Dr. Bracey's discussion.

Book Hampton, East Hampton, brings in best-selling author Louis Begley to read from his latest novel, Schmidt Delivered, on Saturday at 5:30 p.m. Canio's Books, Sag Harbor, has poet Michael Heller reading from his memoir Living Root on Saturday at 6 p.m. Professor Mark Ciabattari continues his popular lecture series about East End writers on Monday, 7 p.m., at the Southampton Historical Museum on Meeting House Lane (free admission, but call and let them know you are coming).

FILMS

The irreverent British comedy Leon the Pig Farmer (1992) is the story of a sensitive London Jew who accidentally learns that he is the son of a Yorkshire pig farmer. It will be shown this Sunday, 6 p.m., at the Parrish Art Museum, Jobs Lane, Southampton. There

Pay It Forward

GOOD IS GOOD BUT . . .

More good news of the "Hollywood in the Hamptons" crew, Did you know: Steven Speilberg's Dreamworks' owns 50% of the current hit, Meet The Parents. And, champ, Ben Gazzara, is starring in a new film Blue Moon, opening Nov. 3rd at three theatres in Manhattan. Ben and co-star Rita Moreno have been getting hot raves from reviewers. I'm, of course, prejudiced.

Now that's good. But, too much of a good thing is gaggingly distasteful and, at least, suspicious. So, when a movie comes along that is bulging with good intentions, overstocked with angelic wing-flapping and oozing over with the saccharin-studded milk of human kindness... even this sentimental old gentleman of swing feels like shattering a baseball bat against the movie screen. I get hell-fired up by the over zealous angels (theatrical financiers, that is) that use good causes to light up the screen with neon gas tube halos for effect and profit. My own guardian angel cringes at that kind of box office KA-CHING! of the cash register. This puts me in a very tight spot. How can I condemn a movie that preaches tolerance and kindness? And there are those gosh-darned, blinking halos. Which is why I didn't go near Remember The Titans. Forget about it! I wouldn't dare put ball point to pad about it, let alone upset my LapTop (the cherubic l'il Toy Poodle I work with). How could I not support a movie that dealt with reconstructing race relations and graduated football coach, Denzel Washington, to the level of Martin Luther King, Jr. and protecting archangel at the tomb of Vince Lombardy.

ANGELS CAN BE TOO TOO TOUCHING

Now, I cannot allow Pay It Forward to fast-forward past my wrath. So, I pray thee, when was the last time an angel put the touch on you to do a good deed. When was the last time someone picked your emotional pockets . . . angel or otherwise? Specifically, what would you do if an angelic-looking kid with big sagging eyes, that look like the new Mercedes headlights, asked you to do three good deeds and had his hand in your pockets... trying to steal your heart? And the kid is the awfully talented tyke Haley Joel Osment! I'll tell you what to do . . . come prepared to see Pay It Forward , with some large, fluffy white and absorbent handkerchiefs to mop up the tears that the movie makers have torn from your swollen ducts. There is enough super-sudszy Soap bubbled up to redden your eyes permanently and enough handkerchief-wringing scenes to mangle your intelligence.

TAKE IT NOW . PAY LATER

With more KA-CHING! calculations, the location is Las Vegas, where the arm-twisting-for-uplifting ideals begins in a small school on the dusty out-skirts. There, a new seventh grade class begins. The teacher is all business... He is Kevin Spacey, doing an impression of Kevin Spacey, in a wash-n-wear suit and a fire-scarred face. He's a public school teacher with an Oxford scholar's vocabulary . . . using words like "euphemism" (look it up after class). On the black board, he's written an assignment: THINK OF SOMETHING THAT WILL CHANGE THE WORLD AND PUT IT IN ACTION. A frail boy (with the headlights for eyes) outlines his plan. He will perform three good deeds . . . the recipients will do the same to three others. It's a chain letter-like pyramid scheme to end all payoff-at-the-end schemes. Spacey chides Haley Joel, "It's a bit utopian" (look it up). Haloed Haley retorts, "What's wrong with that?" It's a plan that will have every nation populated with big, yellow round faces with huge smiles that say, "Have a Good Day!" eventually lined up in huge processions, carrying lit candles with massive choirs singing "Calling All Angels". I exaggerate only a little . . . cross my heart.

DAY BY DAY, HIGHER AND HIGHER

He starts by bringing home a drug addict for a square meal of Sugar Frosties. Happy meals aside, his home, like everything else, is miserable. His Mom, Helen Hunt, and dad, Jon Bon Jovi, are alcoholics but, since dad's gone, mom is not as black and blue. In between drinks, she's working day and night, waitressing in sloppy places. She is Trailer Trash. This is a credit for Ms. Hunt, who appears plump, popping-out of her Trailer Park Trashiness and Lost Weekend behavior. Hunt's ambitious stretch is blown, however, as is the entire film, by Mimi Leder's give-every-thing-full-throttle direction that boils Italian Opera with the Daytime Soap variety The Pyramid scam flashes back (or was it payed forward?) to a rain-stormy night shoot-out with flashing lights, police, car-crashing hysteria. A young reporter, left with a demolished car, encounters a stranger who hands him wet car keys to a brand new Jaguar. Only strings, you guessed it... three good deeds. So, the reporter is off to get to the bottom of this fast-building Pyramid. There he digs up Hunt's mummy, Angie Dickinson, another whiskey guzzling loser. She had done a good deed for a black dude who shoots up a hospital to do his good deed... and yaddadayaddadayaddada.. . up to the cheapest shot of all ending. Critics are sworn not to tell. However, that unending, candlelight march led by choruses of "Calling All Angels" might have tipped it. My associate, Jinger, the smart poodle, recommends instead, Best In Show, a Dog Show comedy that starts and stops in fits like a dog walking. Jinger likes it because the stars are dogs... sane individuals who are not lead around on leashes like humans.

"They Made The Movie Here" Film Festival 2000

The Brothers McMullen

A BEST PICTURE WINNER * SUNDANCE FILM FESTIVAL

We live on a mighty long island and it houses a million juicy, good stories and this week's "Movies Made Here" Festival Film, The Brothers Mc Mullen, is decidedly one of the most personal and most personable. Written by directed by, and starring local Long Island lad, Edward Burns, he is, on screen, the personification of the above attributes. If an Irish/Catholic young, L.I. guy kept a diary, this movie would assume those pages like the favored film montage of passing time. . . pages of his memoir would peel off breezily and fly through the air like kids on a trampoline who have no idea where they're going to land. Eddie Burns' movie reels-out with that kind of free wheeling risk. It flies in the face of universal truths and, happily, those faces are on the un-level heads of people with their caps on backwards.

Mr. Burns is Barry, a loose-limbed, happy-go-lucky writer, his older, married brother is Jack and his younger brother, Patrick, is skidding awfully close to that wedlock/deadlock. Barry has quit yet another young woman . . . she was thinking marriage. . . he will help keep Patrick out of dreaded wedlock. Surprising to both, older brother Jack is happily married and (hard to believe) very domesticated. He does cooking and laundry as well as coach at the High School. Barry and Patrick can't believe he's happy and you know what? . . . wait!

In the beginning, there was their father, described by them as a f—ing alcoholic, wife beating, child abusing S.O.B! Mom never loved him so, after his merciful (to his wife and children) death she packed up and went back to Ireland to the man she really loved for all those years. Now, the boys have only themselves and, luckily, they are their own best friends. And that's something. Jack, the unfettered artist (no steady girl) and Patrick, out of school and dorm and wary of moving in with his girlfriend are homeless so they wheedle their way into Jack and Connie's crawl-space attic... until Christmas. Jack's trips into Greenwich Village to see his agent and check out apartments detours him with a charming, petite actress and Patrick almost succumbs to his girl's temptations. And good old steady domesticated Jack does succumb to a temptress who wants only his body.

Oh, toor-a-loor-a-loor-ah! the tribulations of the upsetting, on-setting of manhood. Can they achieve it? What with teetering hurdles of guilt, faith, religion, sin, marriage, damnation, hell, bottled beer, divorce and bananas! Bananas? Yes, see the movie.

The performances of everyone in this local cast are what make Independent Films the surprise happy miracles that help cast off the heavy Hollywood weariness. Please join us at that posh haven off Route 114, the Ross School Library. 3 p.m. Sat. Nov 4, 19 Goodfriend Dr., off Route 114.

silvia lehrer's cooking column

With our busy lifestyles and thoughts of the coming holidays it's not a moment too soon to think about holiday entertaining. And we could use all the help we can get.

A useful product such as a fine extra-virgin olive oil makes a great gift for a friend who enjoys cooking. The benefits of olive oil are well known. It is a monounsaturated oil that contains no cholesterol, can raise HDL, the good kind of cholesterol and is available in a range of delicious fruity flavors. Extra-virgin olive oils can be used for cooking (I don't use any other kind) and a drizzle of a high quality oil can enhance a salad, a soup, a pasta, or risotto like no other. A superb example of one that I recently tasted, Lucini Italia Premium Select has a grassy aroma with a peppery finish and can be found in better markets.

Cookie, that all too ordinary word, inspires several culinary traditions; the Italian biscotti, the English tea biscuit and the all-American Oreo. Now along comes Almondina, a biscuit type cookie that is low in calories: four biscuits are only 140 calories. Almonds are the main ingredient in Almondina, which is available plain and with sesame. This completely natural, non-dairy product makes a crunchy and delicious holiday snack.

Soft and creamy goat cheeses have become the darlings of food professionals and foodies alike. Initially known only as chevre, an imported product, American chevre is widely available in the markets largely due to Laura Chenel. Ms. Chenel, after several years as a hands-on apprentice in the French countryside, returned to her native California, purchased a starter goat herd and began to practice the time-honored method of crafting farmstead cheeses. New to the company is Laura Chenel Select, a delightfully tangy goat cheese product of Norway. Use it as a spread on crackers, crumbled over salads or pasta, or coat with olive oil and herbs for an appealing party dish.

The following recipes are compliments of Lucini Italia and Laura Chenel Select.

FRESH ORANGES WITH TOASTED FENNEL

Serves 6

3 seedless navel oranges
3 tablespoons fennel seeds
1/3 cup Lucini Premium Select extra-virgin olive oil
1 bunch arugula, washed and spin-dried
Salt and freshly ground pepper

1. With a sharp knife, cut off orange ends, then carefully slice off surrounding peel and pith. Cut oranges into horizontal 1/4-inch slices.

2. In a non-stick skillet over high heat, stir fennel seeds until fragrant and lightly toasted. Put into a spice grinder or mill and grin seeds until almost a powder.

3. Divide orange slices evenly between 6 plates. Sprinkle fennel powder evenly over slices then drizzle with olive oil. Garnish with arugula and season to taste with salt and pepper. Serve as first course or as a "palate cleanser" between courses.

LAURA CHENEL'S CHEVRE GOUGERE

Makes 24 hors d'ouevres or snack puffs

1 cup water
1/2 cup unsalted butter
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon freshly ground pepper
1 cup flour
4 eggs, lightly beaten
1 4-ounce package Laura Chenel Select Norwegian chevre, crumbled

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Oil a baking sheet large enough to hold 24 2-inch puffs.

1. In a medium saucepan heat water, butter, salt and pepper, constantly stirring over medium heat until mixture boils. Add flour all at once and cook, beating with a wooden spoon until mixture pulls away from the sides of the pan and forms a ball (about 1 minute). Remove from heat.

2. Add eggs all at once and beat well with a wooden spoon, 3-5 minutes until batter is smooth and shiny. Add cheese until well blended. Drop by heaping tablespoons onto prepared pan at about 4-inch intervals and bake until well browned, 35-40 minutes. Serve hot.

MIXED GREENS WITH HERBS AND BAKED CHEVRE

This is an adaptation of Laura Chenel's Baked Chevre.

Serves 4-6

Several branches of fresh herbs, such as rosemary, thyme and sage
1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil
2-3 rounds of Laura Chenel's chevre, cut in half crosswise
1/2 cup toasted bread crumbs
1-2 cloves garlic, minced
2 teaspoons grainy Dijon mustard
1 1/2 tablespoons red wine or sherry vinegar
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
3-4 cups mixed salad greens washed and spin-dried

1. Rinse herbs and pat dry with paper towel. Place herbs in a skillet with 1/4 cup olive oil and heat slowly to warm for a 3-4 minutes. Meanwhile arrange the chevre rounds in one layer on a platter. Pour over the warm oil and herbs and set aside for two to three hours.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees about 20 minutes before serving.

2. Discard herbs and coat both sides of marinated chevre with bread crumbs. Place them on a baking sheet in one layer and bake for 10-12 minutes until golden brown.

3. Meanwhile, prepare vinaigrette: Mix garlic and mustard in a bowl and whisk in vinegar and salt. Season with pepper and slowly whisk in remaining 1/4 cup olive oil. Pour enough vinaigrette over salad greens to coat and divide among 4-6 plates. Top each salad with a baked chevre round and serve at once.

In order to enable those with special needs to live independently for longer periods of time, Avatar has made an extensive study of the universal design issues that impede the lifestyle of the physically challenged and identified numerous problems common to the aging process. This knowledge, coupled with their expertise in the American Disabilities Act (ADA) regulations and the New York State Department of Health requirements, has helped Avatar to design creative solutions for people who, in many cases, would be unable to remain in their own homes.

Avatar East is a state recognized WBE (Women's Business Enterprise) and is approved by the NY State Office of Mental Retardation and Developmentally Disabled, the Federal Veterans' Administration Medical Centers, the New York Health and Hospitals Corp., and Catholic Health Services, amongst others. ## EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

The last several weeks have been hectic for Long Island Farm Bureau. This past Monday was our Annual Meeting, during which, the general membership votes on policy matter as well as organizational functions were discussed. The voting members voted on a number of issues that we would like to see as legislative priorities. The issue of wildlife management is foremost in growers minds as wildlife, in particular deer and Canada geese, are eating their way through area farms. I have never heard from so many farmers that "something" has to be done to cull the herd. We agree. We have scheduled a meeting with DEC Region I Director Ray Cowen and the director of DEC Fish and Wildlife Unit from Albany to discuss further options to control the population. Anyhow, LIFB was instructed by the members to make this issue a priority.

The other significant resolution related to the GMO issue or genetically modified organisms. Some members wanted Farm Bureau to support the proposed five year moratorium legislation introduced in the 2000 legislative session. Rather, the membership voted to support the use of biotech crops provided they are approved for use by US Department of Agriculture, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and the Food and Drug Administration. Each agency has independent responsibilities in the approval process. If biotech crops meet the criteria established, then we believe them to be safe. At the same time there is concern over "unanticipated consequences" of new technologies. So, therefore, we support additional funding be made available for research at the federal and state agencies and universities to review and monitor results of the use of biotechnology produced plants. The two above mentioned issues were debated and then voted for approval by the majority of members present.

LIFB President, Howard Johnson of East Northport, was voted in as president for his third, one year term. This will be Howard's final year as president of LIFB as we have term limits on officers. Henry Talmage of Riverhead was re-elected as vice-president. He will be Howard's successor next October. Congratulations to both of these fine men. They give the organization an extraordinary amount of time as volunteers in representing the agricultural industry.

Howard and I traveled, after the annual meeting, to Jamaica (as in Queens, not the island). Howard testified before the NYS Assembly Ag and Food Policy Committee on the GMO issue. There were about 20 different speakers on both sides of the issue. After the hearing, we went into Manhattan to Chinatown to speak with the Cornell Lead VIII Class who were in town as part of their two year program. Bill Sanok and Caroline Kiang from Cornell Cooperative Extension met us at the Sweet and Tart Restaurant on Mott Street. We each spoke to the class about Long Island agriculture and the issues we confront as an industry.

I suppose I should brag a little bit about some recent personal opportunities. As you know, I like to inspect the greens occasionally. My brother-in-law had called me to play Winged Foot in Westchester County (#13 in the country). It was a surreal experience as I played to my sixteen handicap on a very posh, difficult course. But that wasn't the end of the day yet! I then went to dinner at Carlton at the Park in Nassau County where a small group of Long Island executives had dinner with U.S. Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman (his wife and daughter are Long Islanders). He spoke about trade relations with China and Cuba, the upcoming presidential election (former U.S. Congressman and Gore Campaign manager Tom Downey also spoke to us), farm policy and the importance of bio-technology. It was an awesome experience as I spent several hours with those gentlemen. Now off to Saratoga to the NY Association of Conservation Districts' Annual Meeting over which I preside. I'll fill you in on that meeting in the future. Stay tuned.

Joseph M. Gergela, III is executive director of Long Island Farm Bureau

Five Tips For Beating Stress

According to the American Institute of Stress, Americans are more stressed than ever before. Forty three percent of adults suffer adverse health effects as a result, and 75 to 90 percent of adult visits to primary care physicians are precipitated by stress-related problems. Stress also causes approximately one million employees to be absent on any given workday and ultimately is responsible for nearly 50 percent of employee burnout and 40 percent of worker turnover.

"Stress is an inescapable part of modern life," explains Todd Imholte, vice president of Hopkins, MN-based Environmental Graphics. "Whether we like it or not, we're constantly juggling a myriad of professional and personal responsibilities, often with too little time to do any of them justice. Add in technology which now allows us to be 'on call' during our leisure time via cell phones, pagers and e-mail, and it's no wonder our stress levels are higher than ever before."

That's the bad news. The good news is that there are a variety of stress management techniques that can be easily incorporated into the busiest daily routine. Imholte offers a few suggestions:

TOP FIVE STRESS-BUSTERS

1. Go for a walk - on the beach, in the mountains or around your neighborhood. Just 20 minutes a day can work wonders, both physically and mentally.

2. Bring the outdoors indoors. Decorate your home with nature-inspired decor to help you relax and soothe the soul.

3. Take up an enjoyable hobby. Whether it's painting, playing an instrument, knitting or fly-fishing, choose something that will force you to calm down and enjoy the moment.

4. Try Tai Chi, meditation or prayer. By focusing on within, you'll acquire a proper perspective and better control over the anxiety-riddled external world.

5. Hug your spouse. Kiss your children. Pet your dog. Laugh. Be playful ... spontaneous ... and have fun.

Imholte emphasizes the importance of creating a peaceful, nurturing home environment. "At the end of a busy day, most of us want to 'cocoon' and escape from the hectic outside world."

POLICE BLOTTER

Holy Great Pumpkin, Batman! A caretaker for the Sabin residence in Amagansett reported the theft of a two hundred pound pumpkin – along with four "Lazio for Senator" signs. As of presstime, the fate of the enormous squash is unknown, likewise the fortunes of Mr. Lazio, though that will be decided on November 7.

In the equal time department: a resident of Beech Street in Montauk reported to police that on numerous occasions he has placed "Hillary for Senator" signs in his front yard, but they have been stolen by an unknown party. No pumpkin was involved in this theft.

A cell phone call to East Hampton Town Police reported a fifty gallon garbage pail on fire at Indian Wells Beach. The conflagration spread to a park bench. The Amagansett Fire Department responded and contained the blaze. Police reported no persons or vehicles about when they arrived.

The police were turned on (no pun intended) to a pot growing concern off Millstone Road in Noyac by an anonymous call. Charles Versaggi, a contractor who lives on the property in question and Robert Kostecki, a landscaper from North Sea, were arrested in what police described as an "elaborate" operation. Indeed, $100,000 in cash was found in Versaggi's house. A trailer on the property was arranged to dry and store marijuana. The anonymous call said the Versaggi property was in violation of several town ordinances, and, as if an afterthought, added that pot was being grown there..

So you think you can ignore a traffic fine. Arkaduisaz M. Grupa found out otherwise. The Sag Harbor resident was arrested at his house for failure to pay for a ticket.

Leroy Hardy of Bridgehampton, who has appeared in this column a number of times, was arrested at the Bridgehampton Commons and charged with disorderly conduct. Mr. Hardy was intoxicated and creating a nuisance of himself.

* * *

Hell hath no fury... like a woman with a van. A Westhampton woman and a woman from Forest Hills, got into a severe argument in Hampton Bays. The Westhampton lady got angry with her estranged husband who came to visit his two year old daughter. He was accompanied by the Forest Hills lady. An disagreement over the safety of the husband's car seat quickly led to the angry mother getting into her 1993 Dodge van and pinning the Forest Hills woman between the van and another car. The vengeful van driver then took her child and went off. The Forest Hills woman told police her toes had been run over.

A Montauk man was arrested for DWI, though he wasn't really driving at the time. An East Hampton Town police officer found Jaime Nariguanga alseep at the wheel of his still still runnning '86 BMW around one in the morning and woke him up. The car was on a berm on South Elwood in Montauk. Mr. Nariguanga had a can of Budweiser between his legs when the law disturbed his slumber. He failed the required sobriety tests.

Last weekend a scarecrow designed by Barbara Maitan and which was displayed in front of Dan's Papers' offices, was found in a prone position in front of the doorway. The wind was first suspected, but when it was discovered that a white beard had been ripped from the scarecrow's face, the possibility of more sentitent suspects was considered.

VIEW FROM THE BRIDGE NO MORE?

Dear Dan,

Don't you love the beautiful view of the Peconic River and bay as you drive across the Route 105 bridge between Flanders and the North Fork? Then you should know that a certain "few" people living near the vicinity of the 105 bridge have been busy trying to take that beautiful God-given scenic view away from you!

This handful of individuals, privileged enough to live on the water in the heart of this gorgeous setting, have convinced County Legislator George Guldi that the traffic noise emanating from the bridge since its resurfacing has gotten so much louder than it was previously. Legislator Guldi has allocated $50,000 toward a "solution" to their noise dilemma. The so-called solution to the so-called problem is to be the installation of a solid four-foot high plastic noise abatement wall attached to the bridge railing along the entire length of the bridge. Unless you drive a truck or some other sort of very high riding vehicle you'll never view the boats, kayakers, wild fowl, schools of fish feeding on schools of bait or the breathtaking sunrises and sunsets again! Imagine driving over the 105 bridge and seeing nothing but a solid plastic wall from now on.

When I became aware of this, I called Legislator Guldi's office only to be told that it was a "done deal," as if to say that there's nothing that I (or we) can do about it. The selfishness of a chosen few coupled with the arrogance of Government makes for a nasty combination "They have spoken!"

Question: Did anyone ask you for your opinion before allocating $50,000 to quell the complaint of a handful of people?

For your information, the major spear-header of this campaign to block out your view is a weekend resident that for five days out of the week isn't even here to be offended by the "noise." I've been told that they had the noise levels measured to demonstrate the "seriousness" of their compliant. Question: Were noise levels ever measured prior to the re-surfacing? If you buy a waterfront home near a bridge, chances are good that you're going to hear traffic noise... stop focusing on it and focus instead on the absolute beauty that you're privileged enough to be surrounded by. But above all, don't take that beauty away from the hundreds of thousands of people who routinely travel over the bridge. That's just not fair! If it really is necessary to install such a wall, then why does it have to be four feet high, thereby blocking the majority's view? Wouldn't a three-foot high wall achieve sufficient noise dampening without depriving us all of the scenery from the bridge?

If you want to prevent this injustice from happening then immediately call Legislator George Guldi's office (852-8200) and tell him so. It wouldn't hurt to write a letter too, but at least call and do it now or it might actually be too late!

One final Question: The beauty to be seen from the Route 105 bridge is one of those rare pleasures in life that you get for free. Why would you want to spend $50,000 of your money to block it out forever?

Please, for all of us and all those to follow... don't let that happen. Make that call before it is too late.

Sincerely,
Lindsay Reeve
Flanders

Dan's Sponsors Little Flower Toy Drive

The summer has come to an end, Halloween has passed, and we have already seen the first signs of snow. Which in one way or another makes it that time of year again. Yes, it is true; Holiday season is just around the corner. 'Tis the season for shopping, decorating, cooking, and spending time with family and friends.

As we here on the East End enjoy the hustle and bustle of the holidays, there are those less fortunate here in our community. Children in foster care homes and disabled adults and children in residence homes, for the most part, do not have family and friends to shower them with gifts. Nor do they have the resources.

Little Flower Children's Services is there to help many of these less fortunate children and teenagers. Located in Wading River, the Little Flower Residential Treatment Center is home to ninety-five boys and girls from eight to fourteen years of age. So, we here at Dan's Papers are asking you our reader to help us, help them. We will be placing collection boxes in various locations around the East End. We are asking you to remember these children when you are shopping for your family and friends in this the 2000 holiday season. We invite all ages to participate in giving to those less fortunate in this Christmas donation drive.

Starting on Friday, November 24, gifts will be collected by Dan's Papers special elves and delivered to Little Flower orphanage in Wading River, just before Christmas. All gift donations must be new. There is no need to gift wrap, our elves will need to see them to determine which gift will be exactly right for each recipient.

As Christmas gets closer Dan's Papers will include lists of suggested gifts. Below is a list of the "Drop of Locations." If you have any questions or suggestions, please call Cortney here at Dan's Papers – 537-0500, x225. Thank you in advance for your generosity and here's to a happy holiday season for you and your loved ones.
